

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

ĀR ŚANĀYA THE TWENTY-THIRD TĪRTHANKARA OF THE JAINAS
 Facs. (Folios-I) of MS. of the Paṇḍya Sūtra of the Thirteenth Century

C. 100 x 100 mm. 1/2 x 1/2 in.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

800 B.C.—A.D. 526

BY

CHIMANLAL J. SHAH, M.A.

WITH A FOREWORD BY THE REV H. HERAS, S.J.

DIRECTOR INDIAN HISTORICAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE
ST XAVIER'S COLLEGE, BOMBAY

A. SAGAR BOOK HOUSE

NEW DELHI

(INDIA)

Published by

A. SAGAR BOOK HOUSE

Publishers *Distributors of Indian & Foreign Books
Street No 3 Shop No H-60 (Behind Indraprastha Hotel)
Laxmi Nagar Delhi-110092

FIRST INDIAN EDITION

1989

Printed at -

Nav Parbhat Printing Press

1/5057 Galis No 2 Balbir Nagar

Near GO ft Road Shahdara,

DELHI 110032

TO MY FATHER

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

THE author takes this opportunity of thanking the trustees of Sheth Anandji Kalyanji for their kind help, which has rendered possible the publication of this work

PREFACE

MR C J SHAH is one of the pioneer students of the Indian Historical Research Institute, and his work will undoubtedly be of great credit to his Alma Mater. Being himself a Jaina, he took up the early history of Jainism as the subject of his research, and the result of his studies is embodied in the present book.

Jainism is the most overlooked among all the great religions of India. The present work will disclose whatever is historical and legendary in the early history of this religion, the doctrines of its founder, the divisions among his disciples, the spreading of the new faith and the continuous struggle with its sister-faith, Buddhism, which it has survived in the country that witnessed the birth of both of them.

Two limits will be found in this history of Jainism by Mr Shah—one geographical, the other chronological. Jainism was soon spread all over South India, and formed there a new community with different Gurus, different practices and even a different ritual. In short, the history of Jainism in South India is totally different from the history of Jainism in North India, and forms by itself a different historical unit. That is the reason why Mr Shah has limited his work geographically to Āryāvarta.

The other limit of Mr Shah's work is chronological. His history stops at A.D. 526, when the list of canonical works of Jainism was finally drawn up in the Vallabhi Council. This event was a landmark in the history of Jainism. Prior to it Jainism was in a state of primitive simplicity that was totally lost after the codification of its religious books. After this date Jainism appears crystallised, and loses its genuineness and sincerity. Mr Shah has selected for his work the early period, which is much more interesting and of much greater cultural value.

As regards the method followed in this work, nothing will, it is expected, be objected against it even by the most scrupulous historians. Certainly there is never a human work totally flawless. This, and the fact that it is the first work of Mr Shah, will sufficiently commend the following pages to the benevolence of readers and critics. I ought however to mention that he has not been satisfied by seeing what other authors have said or propounded—since that is not research but mere compilation. He has studied the sources themselves, has criticised opinions, has discussed controversial points, has compared sources with sources and has thus finally elucidated one of the most obscure periods in the history of India, with the criticism and impartiality proper to a historian.

PREFACE

The work of Mr Shah is No. 6 in the series of "Studies in Indian History of the Indian Historical Research Institute." It is to be expected that its appearance will communicate new encouragement to his successors, the present research workers of the Institute. Many an obscure point still exists in India's past which demands the sincere work of rising historians of India for the benefit of posterity. The work of the historian is the investigation of truth. And truth will always reveal itself if we look for it with constancy, with sincerity and with an unprejudiced mind. Then truth itself will be the crown of our efforts.

H HERAS, S J

BOMBAY,
15th January 1931

CONTENTS

CHAPTER I JAINISM BEFORE MAHĀVĪRA

	PAGE
Indication of the term Jainism	1
Origin of Jainism	3
Traditional claim to antiquity higher than modern criticism admits	3
Pārśva and Mahāvīra considered historical personages	3
Grounds of Pārśva's historicity	4-5
Early references to Jainism in Buddhist literature	5-6, 8
Connection between the Jaina church of Pārśva and Mahāvīra	7, 10
References to Jainism in Hindu literature	8-9
Modern scholars on the antiquity of Jainism	11-12

CHAPTER II MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

I

Some details about Pārśva	13
Mahāvīra comes two hundred and fifty years after Pārśva	13
A great flourish of religion in India	14
Increasing influence of the Brahmins and the privileges of the caste system	14-16
Virtual ending with Mahāvīra and Buddha of the abuses begotten of the privileges of the caste system	17
No anti-Brahman prejudices at the root of this great Indian revolution	17
A gradual change in the history of Indian thought and outlook on life	18

II

Jainism in general	19
Life of Mahāvīra	20
Exchange of embryo	21-23
Mahāvīra's parents are worshippers of Pārśva and followers of the Śramanas	24
Ascetic career of Mahāvīra	25
Mahāvīra's nudity and the interpretation of the Jaina canon	25
Mahāvīra's wanderings covered a wide area	26
The date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa	27-33

III

Origin of the world according to the Jainas	34-36
Jinas, the spiritual leaders of the Jainas	37
	IX

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Jiva, Ajiva, Punya, Pāpa, Ātrava, Samvara, Bandha, Nirjarā and Moksha	38-41
The way to Moksha lies through the Ratnatraya , or "the Three Jewels"	42
Samyag-Darśana (Right Belief), Samyag-Jñāna (Right Knowledge) and Samyag-Cāritra (Right Conduct)	42-48
An absolved soul said to enjoy all the attributes of God	44
Tirthankaras and Kevalins or Sāmānya Siddhas	45
Indication of the term Tirthankara	45
Ideal of Ahimsā	46-51
Two disciplines of Sāmāyika and Pratikramana	51-52
Doctrine of Syādvāda or Anekāntavāda	53-57

IV

Some of the most important schisms of the Jaina church	58
The seven Ninhagas or Ninhavas — Jamālī , Tisagutta , Āsādha , Aśvamitra , Ganga , Chalue , and Goshtāmāhila	58
Gosāla Mankhaliputta , the most prominent rival of Mahāvira	58-60
Relative position of Mankhaliputta in the great wave of religious enthusiasm in India	59, 63
Dr Barua and the Ājīvika sect of Gosāla	61-63
Gosāla 's influence on the formulation of the reformed church of Mahāvira	63, 64
The date of Gosāla 's death	64
The Ājīvika sect from an historical point of view	65-66
The second epoch making division in the Jaina church	67
The Svetāmbara and Digambara sects of the Jainas	67
Various traditions about the schism	67-68
General unanimity about the period of the schism	69
Root cause of the schism Is nudity a necessary condition of saintship?	70
The Jainas and the cult of nudity	70-71
The chief points on which the two divisions do not agree	72
Mathura sculptures and the great schism	72
Two distinct divisions not in existence till the beginning of the Christian era	73
Final separation about the period of the great council at Vallabhi	73
The non-idolatrous sect and other minor divisions in the Jaina church	74
A mania for divisions a peculiarity of the Jainas	75
Reasons why Jainism is still a living sect	76

CHAPTER III JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES 800-200 B C

I

The epoch of Pārśva	79
Jaina literature the only data for the period of Pārśva	80
Royal patronage in the days of Pārśva	83
X

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Absence of all data from Pārśva to Mahāvīra	84
A lacuna of two hundred and fifty years	84
The days of Mahāvīra	84
His father Siddhārtha	84, 85
The Vidhans, the Licchavis, the Jñātrikas and the Vajjis of the Confederacy of the Vajjis or the Licchavis	85
Their relations with the Mallakī clans and the Ganarājās of Kāśī-Kosala	85, 86
All these clans had directly or indirectly come under the influence of Mahāvīra's teaching	86
The Videhans	86, 87
The Licchavis	86 104
The Jñātrikas	104-106
The Vajjis	106
The Mallakins	107
The Ganarājās of Kāśī Kosala	108-110

II

The sixteen Mahājanapadas and the Jaina church	110
Empire of Magadha and its importance in the light of Jaina history	111
Different dynasties that rule over Magadha and the Jaina church	112
The Śaśunāgas	112-124
The Nandās	124-180
The Mauryas	180-146

CHAPTER IV JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

Jainism in Kalinga-deśa is Jainism of the days of Khāravela	147
The Hāthigumphā inscription the only historical source for Khāravela	147, 148
Importance of Orissa in the light of Jaina history	149
Ruins neighbouring the Hāthigumphā inscription	180
The Khandagiri and Udayagiri Hills honeycombed with caves or cells mostly dating back to the second or third century B C	151
The Satbakhra, Navamuni and Ananta caves	151
The Bārabhuji, Trisūla and Lālatendu keśari's caves	152, 153
The Rāni and Ganeśa caves	154, 155
The Jayaviṇaya, Śwargapuri, Tiger and Serpent caves	155-157
Historical importance of this fragmentary evidence	157
Prominence given to Pārśva	154-155, 157
The Jaina temple on the Khandagiri Hill	158
The Hāthigumphā inscription	159
The eighth line of the inscription and the date of Khāravela	161-164
Contents of the inscription	164 ff
Khāravela and the Jina of Kalinga	172, 173
Antiquity of Jainism in Kalinga	178, 179
Khāravela and the Jaina religion	180 ff

CONTENTS

CHAPTER V MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

	PAGE
After Khāravela comes Vikramāditya of Ujjain	187
Era of Vikrama and Siddhasena Divākara	187
Gardhabhilla, the predecessor of Vikrama, and Kālikācārya	188
Saint Kālaka and Sātayāna of Pratiśthānapura	188, 189
Siddhasena Divākara and his times	189
Pādaliptācārya and the traditions connected with him	190, 194
Traditional literature of the Jainas and the reality of Vikrama and his era	191, 192
Mathura inscriptions and their importance in connection with the Jain church	194
Kankālī Tila the source of Jain records of Mathura	195
Inscriptions connected with the Satraps of Mathura	195-197
Dated and undated Kushāna inscriptions	197-199
Mathura inscriptions and their importance in the light of the history of the Jain church	200 ff

CHAPTER VI STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

Historical background from the Kushānas down to the advent of the Guptas	204
Extent of the Gupta Empire	205
State of religion during the Gupta period	205
Epigraphic evidence of the sympathy of the Guptas towards the Jainas	205 ff
The Kuvalayamālā tradition and the Jain chronicle of the Gupta period	209 ff
Rise of the Vallabhis and the end of the Guptas	215
Dhruvasena I, the fourth in the Vallabhi list, and the end of the unrecorded period of Jain history	216

CHAPTER VII JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

Introductory remarks	218, 219
The Siddhānta of the Jainas	219-221
Digambara belief regarding the Śvetāmbara canon	221-223
Grounds in favour of the Svetāmbaras	223, 224
Fourteen Pūrvas	225
Twelve Angas	225 ff
Twelve Upāṅgas	231-233
Ten Pañnas or Prakarnas	233
Six Chedasūtras	233, 234
Four Mūlavūtras	234-236
Two isolated texts	236
Language of the canon	236, 237
Commentatorial works called the Niryuktis or Nirukhtis	237
Bhadrabāhu the oldest commentator	238, 239

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Dharmadāsaṅgaṇi the contemporary of Mahāvīra	239
Umāsvāti and his works	240, 241
Siddhasena Divākara and Pādaliptācārya the outstanding luminaries of Jaina literary history	241 ff

CHAPTER VIII JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

Jainism finds its best expression in architecture	245
Some of the architectural and pictorial remains beyond our period	245-247
Those of our period	247
Certain characteristics of Indian art in general	248
Caves of Orissa—their artistic importance, etc	248 ff
The institution of relic worship in the form of Stūpas and that of idolatry among the Jainas	251-258
Remains in Mathura	258, 254
Āyāgapāṭas of Mathura	254-257
The Vodva Stūpa built by the gods	257, 258
Torana sculptures of Mathura	258, 259
Ornamental slab showing Nemeśa's feat	259, 260
CONCLUSION	261
GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY	268
INDEX	277

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

A H R S	Andhra Historical Research Society
A R	Asiatic Researches
A S I	Archæological Survey of India (Annual Reports)
A S R	Reports of the Archæological Survey of India (Cunningham)
A S W I	Archæological Survey of Western India
B D G P	Bengal District Gazetteers, Patna
B D G P	Bengal District Gazetteers, Puri
B O D G P	Bihar and Orissa District Gazetteers, Patna
B O R I L	Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute Library.
C H I	Cambridge History of India
C I I	Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum
E B	Encyclopædia Britannica
E C	Epigraphia Carnatica
E I	Epigraphia Indica
E R E	Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics
H M I	History of Medieval India
H O S	Harvard Oriental Series
I A	Indian Antiquary
I H Q	Indian Historical Quarterly
J A O S	Journal of the American Oriental Society
J A S B	Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal
J B B R A S	Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society
J B O R S	Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society
J D L	Journal of the Department of Letters (Calcutta)
J G	Jaina Gazette
J P A S B	Journal and Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal
J R A S	Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society
J S S	Jaina Sāhitya Samśodhaka
M A R	Mysore Archæological Report
M E	Marathi Encyclopædia
Q M S	Quarterly Journal of the Mythical Society
S B B	Sacred Books of the Buddhists
S B E	Sacred Books of the East
S B J	Sacred Books of the Jains
Z D M G	Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

I PĀRŚVANĀTHA, THE TWENTY-THIRD TĪRTHAN- KARĀ OF THE JAINAS	(Coloured)	Frontispiece
II NIRVĀNA OF PĀRŚVANĀTHA ON MT SAMMETA	(Coloured)	Facing page 5
III PĀRŚVANĀTHA, THE TWENTY-THIRD TĪRTHAN- KARĀ OF THE JAINAS (MATHURA)		" 12
IV ORNAMENTAL SLAB REPRESENTING THE TRANSFER OF MAHĀVĪRA'S EMBRYO BY NAIGAMESA		" 21
V DURING THE THIRTEENTH YEAR, UNDER A SĀLA TREE, MAHĀVĪRA REACHED THE HIGHEST KNOWLEDGE AND INTUITION CALLED KEVALA	(Coloured)	" 26
VI THE ELEVEN GANADHARAS OF LORD MAHĀVĪRA	(Coloured)	" 37
VII LOMAŚA RSI CAVE, BARĀBAR		" 66
VIII GURU HEMACANDRA AND HIS ROYAL DISCIPLE KUMARAPĀLA	(Coloured)	" 90
IX JAINA GUMPHĀ, KHANDAGIRI PORTION OF A FRIEZE IN THE UPPER VERANDAH OF THE RĀNIGUMPHĀ, UDAYAGIRI		" 149
X SWARGAPURI CAVES, UDAYAGIRI		" 156
XI JAINA TEMPLE AT KHANDAGIRI		" 158
XII COIN OF "ŚRĪ MAHĀRĀJA HARIGUPTA"		" 213
XIII JAINA CAVES AT JUNĀGHAD, BĀWĀ PYĀRĀ'S MATH		" 246
XIV A SPECIMEN OF AN ILLUSTRATED JAINA MS (Coloured)		" 246
XV PART OF A FRIEZE FROM THE GANEŚAGUMPHĀ UDAYAGIRI PORTION OF A FRIEZE IN THE UPPER VERANDAH OF THE RĀNIGUMPHĀ, UDAYAGIRI		" 250
XVI ANCIENT JAINA BRICK STŪPA EXCAVATED, MA- THURA		" 253
XVII ĀYĀGAPATA, OR "TABLET OF HOMAGE," MATHURA		" 254
XVIII TABLET OF HOMAGE SET UP BY ŚIVAYAŚA		" 255
		XV

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

XIX ĀYĀGAPATA WITH JINA, MATHURA, FIRST CENTURY A D	Facing page 255
XX VOTIVE TABLET SET UP BY ĀMOHINI	,, 256
XXI RAILING PILLARS WITH HUMAN FIGURES (MATHURA)	,, 256
XXII SCULPTURE CONNECTED WITH THE VODVA STŪPA , 'BUILT BY THE GODS'	,, 257
XXIII OBVERSE AND REVERSE OF A TORANA , REPRESENTING GODS AND MEN PAYING HOMAGE TO TIRTHANKARAS	,, 256
XXIV OBVERSE AND REVERSE OF A TORANA , MATHURA	,, 258
XXV ORNAMENTAL SLAB REPRESENTING FEMALE DANCERS AND MUSICIANS REJOICING AT NEMESA'S FEAT	,, 259
XXVI FOUR MUTILATED STATUES REPRESENTING THE TRANSFER OF MAHĀVĪRA'S EMBRYO	,, 260

MAPS

1 INDIA IN THE AGE OF PĀRŚVA	}	Facing page 88
2 INDIA IN THE AGE OF MAHĀVĪRA

INTRODUCTION

I

OF all Indological studies Jainism<sup>1</sup> has been particularly unfortunate in that the little that is done for it stands in vivid contrast with the vast undone. Even Buddhism, a veritable sister of Jainism in point of contemporaneous glory as well as rivalry, has not, as is borne out by many an evidence, lacked its due from the scholar-world. This indifference towards Jainism becomes all the more unmerited when we look at the other side of the shield, for Buddhism has practically disappeared from India, whereas the Jaina community not merely exists but wields a considerable influence over the political and economical destinies of this vast country.<sup>2</sup> Although as Mrs Stevenson has observed "It is no longer in any sense a court religion, nevertheless the influence that it wields in India to-day is enormous. Its great wealth and its position as the religion par excellence of moneylenders and bankers makes it, especially in native states, the power behind the throne, and if anyone doubts its influence, he need only count up the number of edicts prohibiting the slaying of animals on Jaina sacred days that have recently been issued by the rulers of the independent states"<sup>3</sup> The Jainas "form, in fact, a very large and, from their wealth and influence, a most important division of the population of India"<sup>4</sup>

Hertel is certainly right when he says that "Amongst European scholars there are comparatively few persons who realize the full importance of Jainism, and the mighty influence which it was, and is, exercising on Indian civilization, especially on Indian religion

<sup>1</sup> The word Jainism is derived from जैन, the adjectival form from जिन, a word common to the names of many other religions as well as systems of philosophy—e.g. Mahommedanism from Mahommedan, Christianity from Christian, Zoroastrianism from Zoroastrian and so forth (but not Buddhism, Manuism or Benthamism), or again, Dvaitism or Advaitism from द्वैत or अद्वैत, Fatalism from fatal, and so on.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Junt, Outlines of Jainism, p. 73.

<sup>3</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), The Heart of Jainism, p. 19.

<sup>4</sup> Works of Wilson, 1, p. 347.

INTRODUCTION

and morals, arts and sciences, literatures and languages ”<sup>1</sup> Neither is there any particular enthusiasm forthcoming in this direction from Indian scholars except for a few eminent men like Jaini, Jayaswal, Ghosal and others of their ilk. But the partiality of scholars towards Buddhism is not without sound reasons, for there is no denying that Buddhism had at one time been so extensive that it was not at all exaggerating to call it the religion of the Asiatic continent. But while it is true that Jainism was certainly restricted to a smaller area, there is evidence enough, as brought out by Mr N C Mehta, that Jaina paintings found a place even on the walls of the cave-temples of Chinese Turkestan.<sup>2</sup>

But this partiality towards Buddhism has unfortunately given rise to some fantastic and even untoward conclusions by, notably, some European scholars, who it must be conceded were at the time of their research virtually deprived of all benefit from any authentic comparative study of Jainism which is so imperative in view of the fact that the past history of these two sister-faiths runs well-nigh parallel. Fortunately for us many such fanciful conclusions have of recent years been corrected by scholars both in the East and the West. We shall notice below only a few of these fads. “Buddhism in proper,” says W S Lilly, “survives in the land of its birth in the form of Jainism. What is certain is that Jainism came into notice when Buddhism had disappeared from India.”<sup>3</sup> Says Mr Wilson: “From all credible testimony, therefore, it is impossible to avoid the inference that the Jainas are a sect of comparatively recent institution, who first came into power and patronage about the eighth and ninth century. They probably existed before that date as a division of the Bauddhas, and owed their elevation to the suppression of that form of faith to which they contributed.”<sup>4</sup>

Writers like Colcbrooke have erred on the other extreme in believing Gautama Buddha to have been the pupil of Mahāvīra, on the ground that one of the latter’s pupils (Indrabhūti) bears the name of Gotamasvāmī or Gotama.<sup>5</sup> Echoes Edward Thomas: “A schism took place after Mahāvīra. Indrabhūti was raised to the rank of a deified saint, under the synonymous designation of Buddha

<sup>1</sup> Hertel, On the Literature of the Śaīlāmbaras of Gujarat p. 1

<sup>2</sup> Mehta, Studies in Indian Painting p. 2. According to Hemacandra, and other Jain traditions also, Jainism was not limited to India of to day.—Hemacandra Parasistaparvan (ed. Jacobi) pp. 69-282. Cf. M L, xiv, p. 319.

<sup>3</sup> Lilly, India and its Problems, p. 144.

<sup>4</sup> Wilson, op cit p. 334.

<sup>5</sup> Jacobi, Kalpa Sūtra, p. 1.

INTRODUCTION

(for Jina and Buddha bear the same meaning according to both Buddhists and Jainas) ”<sup>1</sup> But the fact is that Jina means “the Conqueror” and Buddha “the Knower”

In his paper read at a meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society Mr Colebrooke has said “It is certainly probable, as remarked by Dr Hamil’ton and Major Delamaine, that the Gautama of the Jainas and the Buddhas is the same personage; and this leads to the further surmise that both these sects are branches of one stock. According to the Jainas, one of Mahāvīra’s eleven disciples left spiritual successors—that is, the entire succession of Jaina priests is derived from one individual, Sudharma Svāmī. Two only out of eleven survived Mahāvīra—viz Indrabhūti and Sudharma—the first, identified with Gautama Svāmī, has no spiritual successor in the Jaina sect. The proper inference seems to be that the followers of this surviving disciple are not of the sect of Jina, rather that there have been none. Gautama’s followers constitute the sect of Buddha, with tenets in many respects analogous to those of the Jainas, or followers of Sudharma, but with a mythology or fabulous history of deified saints quite different”<sup>2</sup>

Such hurried conclusions and identifications on both sides on grounds of chance similarity of certain names or dogmas are not only not history but not logic either. In the words of Dr Jacobi such an identification “can only be maintained on the principles of Fluellen’s logic ‘there is a river in Macedon and there is also, moreover, a river at Monmouth. It is called Wye at Monmouth, but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river. But ’tis all one ’tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both’ ”<sup>3</sup>

Even a distinguished scholar like Dr Hopkins connected Mahāvīra exclusively with “idolatry, demonology and man-worship” “Of all the great religious sects of India,” says the same scholar in connection with Jainism, “that of Nātaputta is perhaps the least interesting, and has apparently the least excuse for being”<sup>4</sup> Neither are the final remarks of the learned Orientalist in any sense toned down. “A religion in which the chief points insisted upon are,” he concludes, “that one should deny God, worship man and nourish vermin has indeed no right to exist, nor has it had as a system

<sup>1</sup> Thomas (E.), Jainism or the Early Faith of Aśoka, p. 6

<sup>2</sup> Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, II, pp. 315, 316

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, IA, IX, p. 162

<sup>4</sup> Hopkins, Religions of India, p. 296

INTRODUCTION

much influence on the history of thought.”<sup>1</sup> These conclusions of Hopkins are so much out of the way that we hope to get very near the truth by a merciless process of negating these ill-founded and ill-adduced findings of his. For yet, like other things that have according to him “no right to exist,” Jainism “has existed for over two millennia, and has produced excellent types of men—both monks and householders—and has offered real guidance and solace to many a seeking and believing votary.”<sup>2</sup>

And Dr Hopkins is not the only one of his kind, but he must be distinguished from the rest in that he was neither loth nor perverse in being corrected and purged of these ill-founded conclusions of his. For in the course of a letter to Śrī Vijaya Indra Sūri he remarks “I found at once that the practical religion of the Jainas was one worthy of all commendation, and I have since regretted that I stigmatised the Jaina religion as insisting on denying God, worshipping man and nourishing vermin as its chief tenets without giving regard to the wonderful effect this religion has on the character and morality of the people. But as is often the case, a close acquaintance with a religion brings out its good side and creates a much more favourable impression of it as a whole than can be obtained by an objective literary acquaintance.”<sup>3</sup>

Small wonder, therefore, that, as a result of such immature studies, Jainism was for a long time looked upon as an offshoot of Buddhism, which fact naturally failed to rouse the curiosity of research students in this branch of Oriental study. It went on like this for some time, but thanks to scholars like Jacobi and Buhler it is no longer denied that Jainism had an independent genesis. As a matter of fact, Jainism has now recovered much of the ground lost, owing to the strenuous efforts of these two eminent scholars. The former's introduction to his edition of the Kalpa-Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu and his learned article on Mahāvīra and his Predecessors,<sup>4</sup> published in 1879 and in 1880 respectively, and the latter's essay, Über die Indische Secte der Jaina (The Indian Sect of the Jainas), read in 1877, were, in fact, the first rational, scientific and comprehensive accounts of the Jaina religion. The fame of these eminent scholars, and the great acuity and philosophical acumen with which they treated the subject, attracted the attention

<sup>1</sup> Hopkins, Religions of India, p. 297

<sup>2</sup> Belvalkar, Brahma-Sūtras, pp. 120, 121

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Shah, J G, xxiii, p. 105

<sup>4</sup> I A, ix, pp. 158 ff

INTRODUCTION

of learned Europe to this great religion, and the inquiry which Jacobī and Buhler started has continued to the present day, and has been fruitful of great results. Happily there has been a positive change in the outlook towards Jainism, and it has been restored to its due place among the religions of the world, in view of the glorious part it played in the past and its contribution to the progress of world culture and civilization, which is not inferior to the contribution of any other religion on the globe.

In this very connection Smith has to say that "it may well be doubtful if Buddhism can be correctly described as having been the prevailing religion of India as a whole at any time." He therefore condemns the phrase "Buddhist period" used by many writers as "false and misleading"; for, he says, "neither a Buddhist nor a Jaina period ever existed," in the sense that "neither heresy ever superseded Brahmanical Hinduism."<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless there is no denying that both these faiths have left a permanent impress upon the pages of Indian history, and their contribution to Indian thought, life and culture has been inestimable. Our object, therefore, in the present thesis, is to chalk out the extent of Jainism in general—and not of a particular sect of it, such as Śvetāmbara, Digambara or Sthānakavāsī—in North India, and to trace the history of its vicissitudes as they obtained in that part of India.

II

We shall not attempt to relate here, neither shall we venture to sketch in outline, the mighty developments of the dogmas, the institutions and the destinies of this great religion. We shall hardly be able to thrash out the questions arising in connection with the sources of Jaina history, the immensely variegated traditions, the dual form in which Jaina sacred literature has been handed down in resonance either with the Śvetāmbara or Digambara convention. Ours will therefore be an attempt to follow the fortunes of a people, stout and sturdy, great and glorious, both in making a history for themselves and for their religion, and to estimate, in howsoever tentative and fragmentary a fashion, the intrinsic worth of their contribution, particularly to the rich and fruitful cultural stream of North India.

There are special reasons that bring out the long-felt need of a book of this nature, besides that the theme has met with scant attention from scholars, considering the literary output, during the last century and a quarter, in various other departments of Oriental studies. In the first place, the history of North India can never be complete unless it is as well written in the light of Jainism, in view of the immense changes in the polity as well as royalty wrought by this religion. Secondly, any survey of Indian philosophies cannot but be imperfect without comprising the Jaina philosophy, this applies all the more aptly to the region lying to the north of the Vindhya—the land where Jainism was born. Thirdly, if a well-connected and exact account of Indian rituals, customs, traditions, institutions, art and architecture is the theme of the researcher, then the chequered career of Jainism in the North—interspersed as it is by numerous foreign invasions when no institution however sacred, no religion however potent, was absolutely safe—must naturally secure a pre-eminent place in such a thesis. Says Johannes Hertel in this connection: “Characteristic of Indian narrative art are the narratives of the Jainas. They describe the life and manners of the Indian population in all its different classes, and in full accordance with reality. Hence Jaina narrative literature is, amongst the huge mass of Indian literature, the most precious source not only of folklore in the most comprehensive sense of the word, but also in the history of Indian civilization.”<sup>1</sup> Finally, no study has so potent an influence in forming a nation’s mind and civilization as a critical and careful survey of its past history, and it is through such study alone that an unreasoning and superstitious worship of the past is replaced by a legitimate and manly admiration.

<sup>1</sup> Smith, Oxford History of India, p. 55

INTRODUCTION

Regarding the literary contribution of the Jainas it would take a fairly big volume to give a history of all that the Jainas have contributed to the treasures of Indian literature. Jainas have contributed their full share to the religious, ethical, poetical and scientific literature of ancient India. Taking a comprehensive review of the contribution of the Jainas to Indian culture Mr Barth observes: “They have taken a much more active part in the literary and scientific life of India. Astronomy, grammar, and romantic literature owe a great deal to their zeal.”<sup>2</sup>

In the realm of art, the elaborately carved friezes in the cave-temples and dwellings on the Udayagiri and Khandagiri Hills, the richly decorated Āyāgapatas and Toranas of the Mathura find, the beautiful free-standing pillars on the mountain masses of Gūrnār and Śatruñjaya, the admirable architecture in the Jaina temples at Mount Abu, and elsewhere, are sufficient to evoke the interest of any student of Indian history. Likewise it is impossible, in the region of religion, to appreciate the real force that was behind the great Sankarācārya or the great Dayānanda without following the reactions of centuries of Jaina and Buddhist influence.

<sup>1</sup> Hertel, op cit, p. 8

<sup>2</sup> Barth, The Religions of India, p. 144

INTRODUCTION

These movements in literature, art and religion could not have succeeded but under the wings of royal patronage. Hence our study must necessarily start with tracing the fortunes of Jainism at royal courts, as in its course it "becomes the state religion of certain kingdoms, in the sense that it was adopted and encouraged by certain kings, who carried with them many of their subjects" <sup>1</sup>

But the task is certainly a thorny one. There is no single work which is a complete survey of Jainism in North India, yet it is no mere blank, neither any medley of historical and legendary names, religious parables, and epic and Āgamic myths, heaped up pell-mell. For then in vain have the thousands of ancient Jaina Sādhus and scholars toiled to preserve those elaborate compositions handed down from generation to generation by a feat of memory which is considered a miracle in modern days, and in vain, too, most eminent Indian and foreign scholars and antiquarians have worked during the last hundred and fifty years, if it be still impossible to put together the results of their learned researches in the shape of a connected history such as is intelligible to the general reader and useful to the student.

Although many portions of Jaina history are still obscure, and although many questions of details are still a bone of contention, to construct a general history of the Jaina epochs is happily no longer a desperate undertaking. Desperate or not, we must frankly disclaim any pretensions to discoveries of our own, as well as to extend in any way the limits of Oriental scholarship and research.

In conclusion a word must be added with regard to the denotation of the term "North India." In a limited sense the expression "South India" is applied only to the districts lying south of the Krishna and the Tungabhadra rivers, the portion north of these rivers usually being called the Deccan. But South and North India, south and north respectively of the Narbada and the Mahanadi, form a unit by themselves, and it is in this sense that the term is here used "It is to the south of the Tapti river that the Deccan plateau proper begins The Narbada river is the real parting of Hindustan from the Deccan (Peninsular India)"<sup>1</sup> And it is in this territory that nearly half the Jainas, out of the total population of about twelve lacs, reside to-day And these Jainas, six lacs or so in number, are historically and socially, and also religiously, a definite unit by themselves, even as they are by traditions, customs and habits distinctly northern As among the Buddhists so among the Jainas, this division between North and South, though geographical in its origin, "has extended in the end to the doctrines taught, the question of the canon of scripture, and the entire body of the traditions and usages"<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Smith, op cit, p. 55

INTRODUCTION

<sup>1</sup> Srinivasachari and Aiyangar, History of India, pt 1, p 3

<sup>2</sup> Barth, op cit, p 145

CHAPTER I

Jainism before Mahāvīra

“THE history of ancient India,” says a modern historian, “is a history of thirty centuries of human culture and progress. It divides itself into several distinct periods, each of which, for a length of several centuries, will compare with the entire history of many a modern people.”<sup>1</sup> In these “thirty centuries of human culture and progress” the Jainia contribution is a solid synthesis of many-sided developments in art, architecture, religion, morals and sciences, but the most important achievement of the Jaina thought is its ideal of Ahimsā—non-violence—towards which, as the Jainas believe, the present world is slowly, though imperceptibly, moving. It was regarded as the goal of all the highest practical and theoretical activities, and it indicated the point of unity amidst all the diversities which the complex growth of culture inhabited by different peoples produced.

The name Jainism indicates the predominantly ethical character of the system. As the Buddhists are the followers of Buddha, the Enlightened, the Jainas are the followers of Jina, the Victor, a title applied to all the Tirthankaras of the Jainas.<sup>2</sup>

The generic names of a Jina express the ideas entertained by his votaries about his achievement. He is Jagataprabhu, Lord of the world, Sarvajña, Omniscient; Trikālavat, Knower of the three times (past, present and future); Kṣhīnakarmā, Destroyer of corporeal action, Adhīśvara, Supreme Lord, Devādhideva, God of gods, and similar epithets of obvious purport, whilst others are of a more specific character, as Tīrthakara or Tirthankara, Kevalī, Arhat and Jina. The first implies one who has crossed over (Tiryate Anena)—that is, the ocean; Kevalī is the possessor of Kevala, or spiritual nature, free from its investing sources of error,

<sup>1</sup> Dutt, op. cit., p. 1.

<sup>2</sup> It is also applicable to all those men and women who have conquered their lower nature, and who have by means of a thorough victory over all attachments and antipathies realised the highest. Cf. Radhakrishnan, Indian Philosophy, 1, p. 286.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Arhat is one entitled to the homage of gods and men, and Jina is the victor of all human passions and infirmities <sup>1</sup>

The religion propounded by such a Jina is called Jainism, and it is known by some such designations as Jaina-darśana, Jaina-śāsana, Syādvāda-drshṭi, Jaina-dharma, etc. His followers are called Jainas, generally known as Śrāvakas <sup>2</sup>

It is really difficult, nay impossible, to fix a particular date for the origin of Jainism. Nevertheless, modern research has brought us at least to that stage wherein we can boldly proclaim all those worn-out theories about Jainism being a later offshoot of Buddhism or Brahmanism as gross ignorance or, to repeat, as erroneous misstatements. On the other hand we have progressed a step further, and it would be now considered an historical fallacy to say that Jainism originated with Mahāvīra without putting forth any new grounds for justifying this statement. This is because it is now a recognised fact that Pārśva, the twenty-third Tirthankara of the Jainas, is an historical person, and Mahāvīra, like any other Jina, enjoyed no better position than that of a reformer in the galaxy of the Tirthankaras of the Jainas <sup>3</sup>

The question whether religion is as old as the human race, or whether it is the growth of a later stage, is as little open to solution by historical research as that of its origin and essence, it can be answered only by psychology and is a purely philosophical inquiry. No tribe or nation has yet been met with destitute of belief in some higher beings, which indication is most essential to what is known as religion in the abstract.

Coming to religion in concrete—that is, to a particular belief or faith—we find that there also arises the same question whether it is

<sup>1</sup> Hemacandra, Abhidhānacintāmaṇi, chap. 1, vv. 24-25

<sup>2</sup> जस्य च जैनदर्शनस्य प्रकाशयिता परमात्मा रामहेषाक्षान्तरिपुनेतृत्वादन्वयैकमिनामधेयः ।
जिनोर्हेन् स्याद्वादी तोषेकर इति चामर्शोत्तरम् । अत एव तत्प्रकाशितं दर्शनमपि जैनदर्शनमहोत्सवचनं
जैनशासनं स्याद्वाददुहितेकान्तवाद इत्याद्यभिधानैर्वैयर्थ्येति — Vijayadharmasūtri, Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, p. 189

<sup>3</sup> For a better understanding of the later part of the chapter we shall give below a list of the 24 Tirthankaras of this age. 1 Rishabha, 2 Ajita, 3 Sambhava, 4 Abhinandana, 5 Sumati, 6 Padmaprabha, 7 Supārśva, 8 Candraprabha, 9 Pushpadanta or Suvādi, 10 Śīṭala, 11 Śreyāmsa, 12 Vāsupūjya, 13 Vimala, 14 Ananta, 15 Dharma, 16 Śānti, 17 Kunthi, 18 Ara, 19 Malli, 20 Munisuvrata, 21 Nimi, 22 Nemi or Arishtanemi, 23 Pārśva (Pārśvanātha), 24 Vardhamāna, also named Vīra, Mahāvīra, etc. Every one of them has a discriminative symbol or Lāṅghana for himself, and this is always found on Jaina idols representing them—e.g. the symbol of Pārśva is a hooded snake, and that of Vardhamāna is a lion. Cf. इति स्यादवकाशे स्यान्मूर्तिभिर्जितसंभवा, etc. — Hemacandra, op. cit., vv. 20, 27, 28

JAINISM BEFORE MAHĀVĪRA

as old as the human race, or whether it is a growth of a later stage in human life. Here we are confronted with a more or less universal claim, which is put forth by every religion, and which, to put it frankly, shortly comes to this—ours is the eternal and universal religion and others are heretics. To strengthen and justify this claim of eternity we find almost everywhere a lot of legendary literature which indulges in religious parables and canonical myths. Whether this is human weakness, or whether there is one religion which can justify its claim to eternity and universality, is no business of ours to say. That is beyond the lines that we have marked out for our purpose here. We shall limit ourselves to what Jainism has to say on this crucial question.

To the Jainas, Jainism has been revealed again and again in every one of these endless succeeding periods of the world by innumerable Tirthankaras<sup>1</sup>. Of the present age the first Tirthankara was Rshabha and the last two were Pārśva and Mahāvīra. The lives of these Tirthankaras are found fully worked out both in the Jaina canonical literature and in individual Caritras (life sketches) written by various Jaina Gurus<sup>2</sup>. Of these Rshabha is said to be 500 poles in stature, and he is believed to have lived for 8,400,000 Pūrva years, while both Pārśva and Mahāvīra lived for 100 and 72 years respectively<sup>3</sup>. If we just compare the lives of these Tirthankaras we find that there is a distinct decrement from Rshabha. The one before Pārśva—namely, Nemi—attained the age of 1000 years<sup>4</sup>. This return to reason in the stature and years of the last two Tirthankaras induced some scholars to draw a probable inference that the last two alone are to be considered as historical personages<sup>5</sup>.

Talking of Pārśva, Lassen says: “The opinion that this Jina was a real person is specially supported by the circumstance that <sup>1</sup> Hemacandra has enumerated in his Abhidhānacintāmaṇi the 24 Jinas who have appeared in the past Utsarpiṇī period and 24 others of the future age—उत्सर्पिण्यान्, etc., and भाविण्यां तु, etc.—vv. 50-56. He concludes—इवं सर्वोपसर्पिण्युत्सर्पिणीषु निबोधना. —v. 56.

<sup>2</sup> Among the Sūtras see Bhadrabāhu's Kalpa Sūtra, or Sudharma's Āvaśyaka, etc., to mention a few individual Caritras we have पार्श्वनाथचरित्रम् by Hemavijayagani, शान्तिनाथमहाकाव्यम् by Śrī Munibhadrasūri, मल्लिनाथचरित्रम् by Vinayacandrasūri and also by Haribhadra, महावीरखानिचरित्रम् by Nemicaandra, and so on.

<sup>3</sup> Kalpa-Sūtra, sūtra 227, 168, 147. According to the Jainas one Pūrva is equal to 70,560,000,000,000 years. Cf. Samgrahani-Sūtra, v. 262.

<sup>4</sup> Kalpa-Sūtra, sūtra 182.

<sup>5</sup> Stevenson (Rev.), Kalpa Sūtra, Int., p. 211.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the duration of his life does not at all transgress the limits of probability as is the case with his predecessors" <sup>1</sup>

No doubt history cannot draw inferences on such grounds, but the period of Indian history with which we are concerned is greatly wanting in data on which we can base our authoritative conclusions. "It is almost impossible," observes Dutt, "to fix any precise date in the history of India before Alexander the Great visited the land" <sup>2</sup>. It is really inexplicable why everything has been recorded since the advent of Lord Mahāvira, the product of the great Indian synthesis, and also why authentic records are missing previous to this. With all this, it is not a hopeless task to fix an historical date for Pārśva, the twenty-third Tīrthankara of the Jains. The contemporary literature of the time of Mahāvira and Buddha throws a great deal of light on this important question of Jaina history, and, as we shall see, the evidence put forward by the Jaina Sūtras is also not less worthy of note.

Taking Pārśva, the object of our search here, we find that there is no authoritative data in the form of an inscription or a monument which is directly connected with him, but there are inscriptions and monuments from which an indirect inference can safely be drawn.

Reviewing the Jaina inscriptions from Mathura we find that there is a reference to Rshabha in a dedication to him by lay votaries.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, we find here that most of the inscriptions are dedicated to more than one Arhat.<sup>4</sup> "All of them, whether bearing kings' names or not, clearly belong to the Indo-Scythic period, or—if the era of Kanishka and his successors is identified with Saka-era—to the first and second century A D" <sup>5</sup>. If Mahāvira was the founder, it can with all impunity be said that there is certainly no great gulf of time that divides him from the people, of whose dedication to Mahāvira we have spoken above, since they come only some six centuries after him, which fact would place them at once in possession of much intimate knowledge as to the foundation of the religion. But, over and above this, the dedication is to more than one Arhat, and particularly to Rshabha, which fact

<sup>1</sup> Lassen, J.A., II, p. 261.

<sup>2</sup> Dutt, op. cit., p. 11.

<sup>3</sup> प्रीयताम्भगवानुपमश्री (May the divine Rshabha be pleased) — E I., I, p. 386, Ins No VIII.

<sup>4</sup> नमो सरहंभतानं (Adoration to the Arhats) — Ibid., p. 383, Ins No III.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., p. 371.

AFRONT OF PĀṢAṆYĪTA ON MT. SAMBĒVA from a Palm leaf MS. of the Kolba State of the Thirteenth Century

(Front of leaf of Aśvamedha Sami)

JAINISM BEFORE MAHĀVĪRA

makes it clear as regards both the authenticity of a very ancient beginning of the religion, and the probable succession of numerous Tirthankaras in the meanwhile.

Furthermore, we have a monumental proof in one of the greatest Tirthas<sup>1</sup> of the Jains, the hill of Samet-Sikhar<sup>2</sup> in Bengal, which is known also as Pārasnāth Hill. It is situated in the Hazaribag district. Both in the Kalpa-Sūtra, recorded and proved to have been composed by Bhadrabāhu, and hence which can be traced as far back as c. 300 B.C.,<sup>3</sup> and also in other Jaina literature we find that on the eve of his Nivāna Pārśva came down to this hill and went to Moksha from here.<sup>4</sup>

Coming to contemporary literature we find many reliable statements and coincidences that leave no doubt as to the historicity of Pārśva's life. For our purpose here we need not examine the veracity of all these references, but we shall merely enumerate just a few which are most striking and highly convincing.

According to the Jaina scriptures Jaina Sādhus and Nuns were known as Niganthas and Niganthis—Sanskrit Nirgranthas—etymologically meaning “without any ties.”<sup>5</sup> This is also apparently corroborated by the Buddhist canon<sup>6</sup>, Varāhamihira<sup>7</sup> and Hemacandra<sup>8</sup> call them Nirgranthas, whilst other writers substitute synonyms, such as Ivasana,<sup>9</sup> Muktāmbara, etc. The name Nirgrantha for the Jaina religious men occurs also in the edicts of Aśoka under the form of Nigantha<sup>10</sup>. The Pitakas of the Buddhas often mention the Niganthas as opponents of Buddha

<sup>1</sup> Tirtha, according to Jaina terminology means a place of pilgrimage.

<sup>2</sup> Samet-Sikhar, called in Major Rennell's map Pārsopaut, is situated among the hills between Bihar and Bengal, its holiness is great in the eyes of the Jains, and it is said to be visited by pilgrims from the remotest provinces of India.—Colcl Brooke, op cit, II, p. 213. There is a celebrated temple of Pārśva in that place.

<sup>3</sup> Charpentier, Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Int., pp. 13-14.

<sup>4</sup> See Kalpa Sūtra, sūtra 168, निर्वाणमात्रं मेवेताद्री ययौ प्रभु.—Hemacandra, Trishashṭi Śalākā, Parva IX, v. 316, p. 219.

<sup>5</sup> See Uttarādhyayana Lecture or Adhyayana XII 16, XVI 2, Ācārāṅga, pt. II, Adhyayana III, 2, and Kalpa-Sūtra, sūtra 130 etc.

<sup>6</sup> See Digha Nikāya I p. 57, Buddhism in Translations (Har Or Series), III, pp. 224, 342-343, 469-481, etc. Mahā Pīrimbbāna Sutta, chap. v. 267, etc. Cf. Rhys Davids, SBE, III, p. 166.

<sup>7</sup> शाक्योपाध्यायैर्हैतनिर्यन्धनिभिश्च etc.—Varāhamihira, Bṛhat Samhitā, Adhyayana LI, v. 21. “In Varāhamihira's (sixth century) Bṛhat Samhitā, IV. 19 (ed. Kern), Nagna, ‘Naked’ is the official designation of a Jaina Yati—Barth, op cit, p. 145.

<sup>8</sup> निर्यन्धो भिक्षु, etc.—Hemacandra, Abhidhānaśāntāmanī, v. 76.

<sup>9</sup> विषसलसल etc.—Paṇṣkar, Brahmasūtra-Bhāṣya, p. 252 (2nd ed.)

<sup>10</sup> Buhler, E I, II, p. 272.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

and his followers. Wherever they are mentioned in the Buddhist canon it is mostly to refute their belief, and thus to assert the superiority of the faith of Lord Buddha<sup>1</sup>. These facts prove two things: that the Jaina monks were called Niganthas, and that, as far as the Buddhist writings reach, the Jainas and Buddhists were great rivals<sup>2</sup>.

Coming to Mahāvīra, we find that his father, Siddhārtha, was of Kāśyapa Gotra, belonging to the clan of the Jñātri-Kshatriyas<sup>3</sup>. This is the reason why Mahāvīra was known as Jñātriputra in his own days<sup>4</sup>. Now, in Pāli, Nāta is equivalent of Jñātri, and hence Jñātriputra means Nātaputta, which more resembles Nāyaputta, "a Biruda of Mahāvīra used in the Kalpa-Sūtra and the Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra"<sup>5</sup>. Thus the titles Niganthanātha, Nigantha-Nātaputta, and also merely Nātaputta refer to none else but Mahāvīra. "The discovery of the real name of the founder of the Jainas," says Dr Buhler, "belongs to Professor Jacob and myself. The form Jñātriputra occurs in the Jaina and northern Buddhist books, in Pāli it is Nātaputta and in Jaina Prākṛt Nāyaputta. Jñāta or Jñātri appears to have been the name of the Rajput clan from which the Nirgrantha was descended"<sup>6</sup>.

Again coming back to the Buddhist canon, we find in an old book of the Singalese canon, the Sāmagāma-Sutta, a reference to Nigantha-Nātaputta's death in Pāvā<sup>7</sup>. Furthermore, a reference to the doctrine of the Niganthas, as given in Buddhist canonical literature, confirms the identity of the Niganthas with the Jainas. "The Nigantha-Nātaputta knows and sees all things, claims perfect knowledge and faith, teaches annihilation by austerities of the old Karmas and prevention by activity of new Karma. When Karma ceases all ceases"<sup>8</sup>. There are indeed many such references to Mahāvīra

<sup>1</sup> See Anguttara Nikāya, iii, 74. Mahāvagga, vi, 31, etc.

<sup>2</sup> "Among the religious sects of non-Buddhistic persuasion are the Nirgranthas or Jainas, the adversaries whom Ashvaghosha detests with greater virulence than Brahmins." Narayan Sanskrit Buddhism p. 199 (2nd ed.), see also Mitra, The Sanskrit Buddhist Literature in Nepal p. 11.

<sup>3</sup> नायकुलचर, cf. Kalpa Sūtra, sūt. 110, see also ibid, sūt. 20, etc., Ācārāṅga-Sūtra, pt. iii, Adhyayana XV, 4.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, pt. i, VII, 12, and VIII, 9.

<sup>5</sup> Jacob, Kalpa-Sūtra, Int. p. 6.

<sup>6</sup> Buhler, J. A., vii, p. 143, n. 5. See also "We owe to Professor Jacob the suggestion which is undoubtedly correct, that the teacher, who is thus styled in the sacred books of the Buddhists, is identical with Mahāvīra," etc.—CHI, i, p. 160.

<sup>7</sup> Z D M G xxxiv p. 740. (cf. Buhler, The Indian Sect of the Jainas, p. 34).

<sup>8</sup> Anguttara Nikāya iii, 74. (cf. S B E, xiv, p. xv).

JAINISM BEFORE MAHĀVĪRA

and his theory in the old books of the Buddhas, but we shall limit ourselves to one which is very helpful in tracing this history as far back as Pārśvanātha

There is a reference to Nātaputta's system in the Sāmaññaphala-Sutta, which is as follows Cātuyāma Samvāra Samvuto, which has been interpreted by Jacobi as referring to the Jaina term Cāturyāma "It is applied," says the learned scholar, "to the doctrine of Mahāvīra's predecessor, Pārśva, to distinguish it from the reformed creed of Mahāvīra, which is called Pāñcyāma Dharma."<sup>1</sup>

To understand this interpretation of Dr Jacobi we must know beforehand that the original religion of Pārśva had laid down four great vows for the guidance of his followers, and they are as follows Ahimsā, non-killing, Sunṛta, truthful speech; Asteya, not stealing, and Aparigraha, renouncing of all illusory objects. Mahāvīra being a reformer also saw that in the society in which he was moving Brahmacarya—chastity—must be made a separate vow, quite distinct from the Aparigraha vow of Pārśvanātha.<sup>2</sup>

Referring to this reformation in the Jaina church by Mahāvīra, Jacobi observes. "The argumentation in the text presupposes a decay of the morals of the monastic order to have occurred between Pārśva and Mahāvīra, and this is possible only on the assumption of sufficient interval of time having elapsed between the last two Tirthankaras, and this perfectly agrees with the common tradition that Mahāvīra came 250 years after Pārśva."<sup>3</sup>

Thus from the Buddhist-Granthas themselves we get sound proofs which help us to ascertain the historical character of Pārśva's life. Besides this there is one thing which sounds very strange when we consider all these references about Nātaputta and his philosophy that are available in the Buddhist canon. With all these refutations and references about them in the canonical works of the rival faith the Jainas could ignore their adversaries. It follows from this that the Nirgranthas were considered by the Buddhas an important sect, while the Nirgranthas in their turn did not think it worth while to take any notice of the sister faith. These strange coincidences of both the Buddhist and the Jaina literature go a long way to prove the existence of Jainism much before the advent of Buddha and Mahāvīra.

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, J.A., ix, p. 160

<sup>2</sup> ब्रह्मचरि पञ्चब्रह्मचरि etc —See Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, p. 8

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, S.B.E., xlv., pp. 122-123.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

"The Nirgranthas," observes Dr Jacobi, "are frequently mentioned by the Buddhists, even in the oldest part of the Pitakas. But I have not yet met with a distinct mention of the Buddhas in any of the old Jaina Sūtras, though they contain lengthy legends about Jamālī, Gośāla and other heterodox teachers. As this is just the reverse position to that which both sects mutually occupy in all aftertimes, and as it is inconsistent with our assumption of a contemporaneous origin of both creeds, we are driven to the conclusion that the Nirgranthas were not a newly founded sect of Buddhas time. This seems to have been the opinion of the Pitakas too, for we find no indication of the contrary in them" <sup>1</sup>

So much about references in Buddhist canons now we shall see what the Hindu scriptures and legends have to say about Jainism. Though they seem to be somewhat later than Mahāvira and his times, they go a step further than the Buddhist canon. And, strangely enough, they more or less support the belief of the Jainas that Rshabha was the first Jina of this age.

From Vishnu-Purāna we learn that the Brahmans too have a Rshabha whose life more or less coincides with that of the Jaina one <sup>2</sup>. In the Bhāgavata-Purāna also a detailed account of the life of one Rshabha is given, and from that it is evident that it is none other than the first Jaina Tīrthankara himself. A note on Bhāgavata-Purāna in Wilson's Vishnu-Purāna has it. "That work enters much more into detail on the subject of Rshabha's devotion and particularises circumstances not found in any other Purāna. The most interesting of these are the scenes of Rshabha's wanderings, which are said to be Koṅka, Vankāta, Kutaka, and Southern Kārnāṭaka, or the western part of the peninsula, and the adoption of the Jaina belief by the people of those countries" <sup>3</sup>.

Of the remaining Tīrthankaras, Sumatī, the fifth Tīrthankara, is evidently identical with Bharata's son Sumatī, of whom it is said in the Bhāgavata that he "will be irreligiously worshipped by some infidels as a divinity." <sup>4</sup> Besides this, "Arishtanemi, the twenty-second Tīrthāṅkara, is connected with Kṛṣṇa's myth through

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, IA, ix, p. 161

<sup>2</sup> Nābhī hid by his queen Maru the magnanimous Rshabha, and he had a hundred sons the eldest of whom was Bharata. Having ruled with equity and wisdom, and celebrated many sacrificial rites, he resigned the sovereignty of the earth to the heroic Bharata, etc. — Cf. Wilson, Vishnu-Purāna p. 163

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p. 164 n

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

by Mahāvīra himself, and that the Angas were then composed by his Ganadharas.<sup>1</sup>

From this it becomes clear that Mahāvīra and his Ganadharas who succeeded him were the authors of the Jaina Āgamic literature. When we say that Mahāvīra was the author we do not mean that he actually wrote them, but that whatever is recorded there was taught by him. "For authorship in India depended chiefly on the matter, the words being rather irrelevant, provided the sense be the same."<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, from certain peculiarities of the Jaina literature itself we can also mark that along with the religion it can be traced as far back as Vardhamāna and some time even before him. But we shall not touch any of these characteristic features here, since we are going to deal with them in our chapter on "Jaina Literature."

Now when in such canonical literature of the Jains we find more or less unanimous and reliable reference to Pārśva there is no reason to doubt their authenticity. Take for instance the Kalpa-Sūtra of the days of Bhadrabāhu. It has referred to all the Tirthankaras of the Jains. Its references to Pārśva and Mahāvīra-Dharma have, however, been dealt with. The most important passage is the one in the Bhagavatī wherein is described a dispute between Kālāsavesiyaputta, a follower of Pārśva, and some disciple of Mahāvīra. It ends with the former's begging permission to stay with him "after having changed the law of the four vows for the law of the five vows enjoining compulsory confession."<sup>3</sup> In Śīlānka's commentary on the Ācārāṅga the same distinction is made between the Cāturyāma of Pārśva's followers and the Pāñcayāma of Vardhamāna's Tīrtha.<sup>4</sup>

The same thing is repeated also in the Uttarādhyayana. To quote Dasgupta: "The story in the Uttarādhyayana that a disciple of Pārśva met a disciple of Mahāvīra and brought about the union of the old Jainism and that propounded by Mahāvīra seems to suggest that this Pārśva was probably an historical person."<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, S B E, xxii, Int., p. 45

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, p. 15

<sup>3</sup> तदयं स कालासवेसियपुत्रः अश्वगारे येरे भगवतो वंदइ जर्मसइ २ (भा) हवं वदासी—इच्छामि यं भजे ।
गुप्तं —Cf Bhagavatī Sūtra, Sāṅkha I, sūt 76 Cf also Weber, Fragment der Bhagavatī, p. 185

<sup>4</sup> स हव अतुर्यामभेदाच्चतुर्था, etc.—Cf Ācārāṅga-Sūtra, Śrutaskandha II, vv 12-13, p. 320

<sup>5</sup> Dasgupta, History of Indian Philosophy, I, p. 169 Cf also तच्चो जेतसं पुत्रसं गु गोपसो इत्यमह्वरी —Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Adhyayana XXIII, v. 25

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

religion is certainly older than Mahāvīra, his reputed predecessor, Pārśva, having almost certainly existed as the real person, and that consequently the main point of the original doctrine may have been codified long before Mahāvīra ”<sup>1</sup> Lastly, Dr Guérinot says “ There can no longer be any doubt that Pārśvanātha was an historical personage According to the Jaina tradition he must have lived a hundred years, and died 250 years before Mahāvīra, His period of activity therefore corresponds to the 8th century B.C. The parents of Mahāvīra were followers of the religion of Pārśva ”<sup>2</sup>

From all these overwhelming proofs about the existence of a Tirthankara or Tirthankaras before Mahāvīra we can, without any fear of historical fallacy, affirm that modern research goes rightly as far back as the days of Pārśvanātha About the other Tirthankaras we shall not endorse the opinion of Mazumdar, who, even at the risk of entirely disregarding the Jaina tradition, lays down that Rshabha Deva, the first Tirthankara of the Jainas, “ was a king of the Vairāja dynasty in Bithoor (29th century B.C.) ”<sup>3</sup> We shall merely conclude in the words of Dr Jacobi that “ we must close our researches here content to have obtained a few glimpses into the prehistorical development of Jainism. The last point which we can perceive is Pārśva, beyond him all is lost in the mist of fable and fiction ”<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier, Uttarādhyayana, Int., p. 21

<sup>2</sup> Guérinot, op. and loc. cit.

<sup>3</sup> Mazumdar, op. and loc. cit.

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, op. cit., p. 163

PĀRŚVANĀTHA THE 2ND TIRTHANKARA OF THE JAINA<sup>S</sup> (MATHURA)

(copyright reserved Archer andal Surver of India)

CHAPTER II

Mahāvīra and his Times

I

WE have already dealt with Pārśva, the predecessor of Mahāvīra, in the previous chapter. There is very little in connection with him that we can glean out from any other source but the Jaina Sūtras. From the Buddhist canonical literature we inferred that there was some such thing as the Cāturyama-Dharma of Pārśva. All that we know about him is only through Jaina canonical literature, which has also been the basis for all the historians and scholars who have written about him.

We need not put down here all that the Jainas have to say about Pārśva, because it is impossible to deal with that part of Jaina history which forms the period between the last two Tirthankaras mainly for two reasons—viz that in the first place, what we know about them is chiefly through mere tradition and that, in the second place, there is so much that is contradictory even there. It would be enough to say that Pārśva was born of a king named Astvasena, who was a ruling magnate at Benares, and that his mother's name was Vāmā<sup>1</sup>. Furthermore according to the Jaina belief there were 16,000 monks, 38,000 nuns, 164,000 laymen and 327,000 laywomen who formed his whole following<sup>2</sup>. Pārśva is said to have lived for one hundred years for seventy years of which he was engrossed in seeking Nirvāna<sup>3</sup>.

Coming to Mahāvīra we find that, according to Jaina tradition, he came about two hundred and fifty years after his predecessor<sup>4</sup>. The period of Indian history when Mahāvīra lived is called the

<sup>1</sup> Kalpa Sūtra sūt. 150. see also अश्वतराहामास्वामिना उन्ना etc. Hemacandra, Trishasthi Salākā Parva IX, v. 23 p. 196, Churpenter C.H.I., I p. 154.

<sup>2</sup> Kalpa Sūtra sūt. 161-164.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., sūt. 165. see also समतिव्रतपालन इत्यायुस्सज्जते etc. Hemacandra, op. cit., v. 318 p. 219. Mazumdar op. cit. p. 551.

<sup>4</sup> श्रीपाश्वनिशान्त पञ्चागदधिकर्यशतद्वयन श्रीवीरनिर्माण Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā 7thā p. 132. As he is said to have died 250 years before the death of Mahāvīra, he may probably have lived in the 8th century B.C. —C.H.I., I p. 154.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

rationalistic age Its duration differs with different authors, but generally the limit can be put as between 1000-200 B C<sup>1</sup> The age of epic India had passed away The Kurus, the Pāñcālas, the Kosalas, and the Vidēhas of the Gangetic Valley no more existed It was in this period that the Āryans issued out of the Gangetic Valley and founded Hindu kingdoms even in the southernmost parts of India, suffusing their new settlements with their glorious civilisation

And this is precisely a period which is marked by a great flourish of religion in India "Her ancient religion, which the Hindu Āryans had practised and proclaimed for fourteen centuries, had degenerated into forms"<sup>2</sup> India was now to witness the commencement of a great revolution Whether for the better or for the worse, she had to face a great upheaval in the Hindu fold "Religion in its true sense had been replaced by forms Excellent social and moral rules were disfigured by the unhealthy distinctions of caste, by exclusive privileges for Brahmans and by cruel laws for Sūdras Such exclusive caste privileges did not help to improve the Brahmans themselves As a community they became grasping and covetous, ignorant and pretentious, until Brāhmaṇa-Sūtrakāras themselves had to censure the abuse in the strongest terms"<sup>3</sup>

The institution of priesthood among the Hindus is certainly a later growth, for although the word Brahman is used in the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> (which Veda goes back to the earliest times of Āryan culture in India), it only meant "singers of sacred songs"<sup>5</sup> And it was now that they came to designate a class of religious functionaries As time went on the office seems to have become hereditary, and by and by the Brahmans came to be regarded with higher and higher honour<sup>6</sup> With it their pretensions also rose higher and higher, but they could not yet form an exclusive caste This was the situation before the Āryans had advanced beyond the Seven Rivers, at the mouth of the Indus, where they had origin-

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Dutt op cit (Contents), Mazumdar, op cit (Contents)

<sup>2</sup> Dutt, op cit, p. 340

<sup>3</sup> Ibid p. 341, see also (Brahmans) who neither study nor teach the Veda nor keep sacred fires become equal to Sūdras — Vāsisṭha, iii, 1. Cf. Bühler, S B E, xiv, p. 16

<sup>4</sup> Griffith The Hymns of the Rigveda, ii, pp. 96, 97, etc (2nd ed.)

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Luck Outlines of the History of Religion, p. 115

<sup>6</sup> In course of time the priest's connection with the sovereign appears to have assumed permanency, and probably become hereditary"—Cf. Law, N. N., Ancient Indian Polity, p. 44

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

ally settled after their separation from the Iranians<sup>1</sup> But with a diffusion of the Hindu-Aryans over the region south-east of the Seven Rivers, and their settlement on the Ganges and the Jumna, the Vedic religion gave birth to Brahmanism, or the hierarchy of Brahmins<sup>2</sup>

With Brahmanism came the rigidity of caste system, which "was still a pliable institution in the Epic period, but the rules of caste were made more rigid and inflexible in the Rationalistic period, and it was impossible for the members of a lower caste to enter within the pale of priesthood"<sup>3</sup> This state of things resulted in Brahmins being entirely relieved of manual labour, and being fed on the resources of the industrial classes without doing anything worth while to compensate the other classes<sup>4</sup> They had become idlers to such an extent that they were not prepared to acquire that learning which alone could justify their exemption from labour Vasishtha felt the abuse and the injustice keenly, and protested against idlers being supported and fed, in terms which could be indited only when Hinduism was still the religion of a living nation<sup>5</sup>

The abuses begotten of the privileges of the caste system combined with the circumstance that writing was unknown, or at any rate was not generally employed for literary purposes, contributed to give increasing influence to the Brahmins<sup>6</sup> Subject at first to the princes and nobles, and dependent on them, they began by insinuating themselves into their favour, and representing that the protection and liberty of Brahmins were part of the duties of the princes and nobles Gradually they set themselves up as the exclusive guardians and interpreters of "revelation" (Śruti) and "tradition" (Smṛti), in virtue of their being masters of instruction<sup>7</sup> By far the greater number of works on religion

<sup>1</sup> "It is not so easy to trace the relations between Brahmarshiśāstra and the earlier Aryan settlements in the land of the Seven Rivers"—CHI, i, p 51

<sup>2</sup> Cf Tiele, op cit, pp 112, 117 "The language of the Rigveda, the oldest form of Vedic Sanskrit, belongs to the country of the Seven Rivers The language of the Brahmanas and of the later Vedic literature in the country of the Upper Jumna and Ganges (Brahmarshiśāstra) is transitional"—CHI, i, p 57

<sup>3</sup> Dutt, op cit, p 264 Cf Crooke, ERE, ii, p 493

<sup>4</sup> Cf McCrindle, Ancient India, p 209

<sup>5</sup> "The King shall punish that village where Brahmins, unobservant of their sacred duties and ignorant of the Vedas, subsist by begging, for it feeds robbers"—Vasishtha, iii 4 Cf Buhler, SBE, xiv, p 17

<sup>6</sup> Cf Tiele, op cit, p 121

<sup>7</sup> "To this class the knowledge of divination among the Indians is exclusively restricted, and none but the Sophists is allowed to practise that art"—McCrindle, op and loc cit

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

were composed with a view to the sacrificial service<sup>1</sup> They constitute the four Vedas, each Veda having different Brahmanas These Brahmanas are generally "marked by narrow formalism, childish mysticism and superstitious talks about all kinds of trifles, such as may be expected where a pedantic and powerful priesthood is invested with unlimited spiritual authority"<sup>2</sup>

The Yajña ceremony was so organised and arranged that by and by it became more and more elaborate and involved, and this required a constant increase in the number of ministrants, all of whom were of necessity Brahmins Sometimes they went to such an extent that the reverence for the Devas (gods) also perceptibly diminished as they placed themselves on their level<sup>3</sup> Behind the doctrine of the sacrificial service the popular understanding was that "a suitable combination of rites, rituals and articles of sacrifice had the magical power of producing the desired effect—a shower of rain, the birth of a son, the routing of a huge army, etc The sacrifices were enjoined generally not so much for any moral elevation as for the achievement of objects of practical welfare."<sup>4</sup>

Thus the social ideal of Brahmins was the unlimited power that hierarchy conferred and the strict separation of castes Various useful callings were in this rigid society branded as sinful, and men were prevented from withdrawing even from shameful occupations to which birth condemned them Highest claims were made by the Brahmins, and they were also the recipients of the most extravagant privileges This went on to such an extent that even the unlimited authority of the king was considered to be at their service<sup>5</sup> The very religious bent of the ancient Indians was such that the royal priest<sup>6</sup> was an important personage from the very earliest times of which we have any record Woman was

<sup>1</sup> The sacrificial ceremonial of the consecration of a king (Rājāsūya) the very common horse sacrifice (Asvamedha) the proper human sacrifice (Pṛaśamedha) and the general sacrifice (Sarvamedha) were the most important At these four sacrifices human victims were really offered in ancient times but as the manners grew more gentle this practice began to decline though not with universal approval, finally it fell into disuse

<sup>2</sup> Hick op cit p. 123

<sup>3</sup> They held "the supreme place of divinity and honour" Cf. McCrindle, op cit and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Disgupte op cit i. p. 208 Cf. also Law N S op cit p. 39

<sup>5</sup> They were divinely appointed to be the guides of the nation and the counsellors of the king but they could not be kings themselves Law N S op cit p. 3

<sup>6</sup> Also called Purohit etymologically meaning "placed in front appointed"

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

considered a nonentity in the social organisation, and the Sūdra was despised out and out <sup>1</sup>

Naturally such a state of society was not destined to hold a long time. And it did end with the appearance of Mahāvīra on one side, and Buddha Sāhyaputta on the other. "It is said of the French Revolution," says Dutt, "that it was mainly brought about by two causes—the oppression of the kings and the intellectual reaction set in by the philosophers of the 18th century. The Buddhist revolution in India is still more distinctly the result of similar causes. The oppression of Brahmanism made the people sigh for a revolution, and the work of the philosophers opened the path to such a revolution" <sup>2</sup>

Dr Hopkins goes a little further and lays stress on the psychology of the people with whom these developments first originated. "To a great extent," says the learned scholar, "both Jainism and Buddhism owed their success to the politics of the day. The kings of the East were impatient of the Western Church, they were pleased to throw it over. The West was more conservative than the East. It was the home of the rites it favoured. The East was but a foster-father" <sup>3</sup>

But we are not out to invent any anti-Brahman prejudice for the explanation of this great Indian revolution. It was "an expression of the general ferment of thought which prevailed at the beginning of the epic period" <sup>4</sup>. We need not understand it as a mere "result of Kṣatriya protest against the caste exclusiveness of Brahmins," <sup>5</sup> because "the ground had been well prepared for the growth of a new belief and new doctrines outside the orthodox bull-work of Brahmanism" <sup>6</sup>. Furthermore, the hypothesis of development from which the history of a religion sets out is based on the principle that all changes and transformations in religions, whether they appear from a subjective point of view to indicate decay or progress, are the results of natural growth, and find in it their best explanation.

Coming to our own period we find that this attitude is

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Tiele op cit pp. 129-130. Manu, in spite of his oft-quoted line यत्र नार्यस्तु पृत्यन्ते रमन्त तत्र देवता prohibited woman even the performance of sacramental rites—a prohibition which he places on woman and the Sūdra alike—Cf. chaps. v, 155, ix, 18, and ix, 80.

<sup>2</sup> Dutt op cit, p. 225.

<sup>3</sup> Radhakrishnan op cit i, p. 293.

<sup>4</sup> Frazer op cit p. 117.

<sup>5</sup> Hopkins op cit, p. 282.

<sup>6</sup> Srinivasachari and Iyengar, op cit p. 48.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

corroborated by gradual changes in the history of Indian thought and Indian outlook on life "Tendencies to question the authority of the Vedas," says Kunte, "were shown long before Buddha Gautama succeeded in organising opposition to the Vedic polity, social and religious" <sup>1</sup> The same is the opinion of other scholars also "Buddhism and Jainism," says Jacobi, "must be regarded as religious developments out of Brahmanism, not by sudden reformation, but prepared by a religious movement going on for a long time" <sup>2</sup> There is nothing unreasonable if we say that the echo of what was to come on some future date was already audible in the Upanishads, which had anticipated the new system in all its directions "The pioneers of this new system," says Dr Dasgupta, "probably drew their suggestions from the sacrificial creed and from the Upanishads, and built their systems independently by their own rational thinking" <sup>3</sup> Mr Dutt traces this change in the mind of the people as far back as the eleventh century B C—that is, five centuries before the time of which we are now speaking According to him, "earnest and thoughtful Hindus had ventured to go beyond the wearisome rituals of the Brahmana literature, and had inquired into the mysteries of the soul and its creator" <sup>4</sup>

This was the state of things in the Hindu fold, and hence, naturally, the Jaina fold also could not escape its evil effects <sup>5</sup> We have already seen that Mahāvīra had to make certain distinctions in the four great vows put forward by his predecessor, and this initiative on his part ultimately resulted in the five great vows propounded by him The state of society was such that people would try to take advantage, if any loopholes were available, for a free and easy life, which brings into broad relief Mahāvīra's making clear in all its aspects the Dharma of Pārśva <sup>6</sup>

II

It was amidst this changing flux of thought that Mahāvīra moved, and wove out for himself the solution of the riddle of the cosmos, which placed man's fate, for weal or woe, here and hereafter, in man's own hands, and taught him to look not beyond

<sup>1</sup> Kunte, op cit, pp 407, 408

<sup>2</sup> Dasgupta, op cit, p 210

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, S B E, xxi, Int, p 32

<sup>4</sup> Dutt, op cit, p 340

<sup>5</sup> in the 250 years that elapsed between his death and the coming of Mahāvīra abuses became so rife — Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 40

<sup>6</sup> See Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā, p 3, Jacobi, S B E, xlv pp 122, 123

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

himself for hope or aid. The nation was prepared when he began to preach, for his spiritualism was understood and appreciated, and gradually even the Brahmans recognised him as a great teacher.<sup>1</sup> "Intellectual Brahmans also joined the ranks of Jainas as of Buddhists from time to time owing to conviction as well as for honour, and contributed to the maintenance of the reputation of the Jainas for learning."<sup>2</sup>

Jainism spread slowly among the poor and the lowly, for it was then a strong protest against caste privileges. It was a religion of equality of man. Mahāvīra's righteous soul rebelled against the unrighteous distinction between man and man, and his benevolent heart hankered for a means to help the humble, the oppressed and the lowly. The beauty of a holy life, of a sinless, benevolent career, flashed before his mind's eye as the perfection of human destiny, as the heaven on earth, and, with the earnest conviction of a prophet and a reformer, he proclaimed this as the essence of religion. His world-embracing sympathy led him to proclaim this method of self-culture and holy living to suffering humanity, and he invited the poor and lowly to end their suffering by cultivating brotherly love and universal peace. The Brahman and the Sūdra, the high and the low, were the same in his eyes. All could equally effect their salvation by a holy life, and he invited all to embrace his catholic religion of love.<sup>3</sup> It spread slowly—as Christianity spread in Europe in early days—until Srenika, Kūnika, Candragupta, Samprati, Khāravela and others embraced Jainism during the first few glorious centuries of Hindu rule in India.

Like Brahmanism, Jainism also is based on the so-called dogmas of the transmigration of the soul, and seeks for deliverance from the endless succession of rebirths.<sup>4</sup> But it pronounces the Brahmanic penance and abstinences inadequate to accomplish this, and aims at attaining, not union with the universal spirit,<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> मनुः जपापापुर्वीं जगाम, तत्र बहवो ब्राह्मणा मिलिता. चतुश्चरिच्छ्रवणानि द्विजा. प्रव्रजिता. —Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, pp 112, 118

<sup>2</sup> Vaidya (C V), H M I, iii, p 406

<sup>3</sup> सर्वसत्त्वानं हितमुखायास्तु (May it be for the welfare and happiness of all creatures) —Buhler, E I, ii, pp 203, 204, Ins No XVIII

<sup>4</sup> "He for whom there is no bondage whatever in this world etc., has quitted the path of birth"—Jacobi, S B E, xxii, p 213

<sup>5</sup> "There were two principal world theories in ancient India. One, which was systematised as the Vedānta, teaches in its extreme form that the soul and the universal spirit are identical and the external world an illusion"—Elliot, op cit, i, p 106

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

but Nirvāna—that is, absolute release from all bodily forms and activities<sup>1</sup> Without denying the existence of the Devas (gods), at any rate at first, it places each Jina above them and recognises them as subordinate to a perfect saint<sup>2</sup> It differed from Brahmanism, as primitive Christianity differed from the Jewish hierarchy, by rejecting outward works or theological knowledge as a mark of holiness,<sup>3</sup> and seeking it in gentleness, in purity of heart and life, in mercy, and self-denying love for a neighbour Above all, it is distinguished by its relation to castes Mahāvīra comes neither to oppose them nor to level everything On the other hand, he adopts a doctrine that men are born in lower or higher castes determined by their sins or good works in a former existence, but it teaches at the same time that by a life of purity and love, by becoming a spiritual man everyone may attain at once the highest salvation Caste makes no difference to him, he looks for the man even in the Cāndala<sup>4</sup>, the miseries of existence beset all alike, and his law is a law of grace for all Therefore the most salutary change that Mahāvīra brought about was his effort to show how circumstantial indeed caste system was, and how easy it was for a spiritual man to break the fetters of caste system

This is Jainism in general It is quite popular in its character, and its instrument is preaching rather than instruction Coming to Mahāvīra we find that he too, like Buddha, was born of a Kshatriya aristocratic family In fact, all along, it has been the Jain belief that a Jina must always come from a Kshatriya or some such noble family<sup>5</sup> Now it so happened that because of certain actions on his part in his former lives<sup>6</sup> Mahāvīra had first

<sup>1</sup> आत्मनिको वियोगस्तु दहान्तोऽयं उच्यते —Haribhadra: Shaddarsana Samuccaya, v 52

<sup>2</sup> देवाधिदेवं सर्वज्ञं श्रीश्रीं प्रणिज्महे —Hemacandra Parisīkhatapanian Canto I, v 2 जिनेन्द्रा सुरामुनेन्द्रमपूज्य Haribhadra op cit vv 45, 46

<sup>3</sup> One does not become a Śramaṇa by the tonsure nor a Brahman by the sacred syllable OM nor a Muni by living in the woods nor a Tāpasa by wearing (clothes) Kusa grass and bark — Jacobi SBE xlv p 140

<sup>4</sup> मारागकुलसंभूता हरिश्च बला etc Uṇarādhyayana Lecture XII 1

<sup>5</sup> Harikṣa Bala was born in a family of Ścapālas (Kāṇḍālas), he became a monk and a sage etc Jacobi op cit p 30

<sup>6</sup> It never has happened nor does it happen, nor will it happen that Arhats, be born of poor families beggars families or Brahminical families For indeed Arhats are born in high families in families belonging to the race of Ikṣvāku or in other such like families of pure descent on both sides Jacobi SBE xxii, p 225

<sup>7</sup> According to the Jain belief whatever we are in our present life is a net result of all our Karmas committed during our previous births All Karmas are generally

ORNAMENTAL SCULPTURE. THE TRANSFER OF THE RELICS TO THE STUPA AT NAGASENA

See also the Ashoka Stupa at Nagasena

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

to take the form of an embryo in the womb of a Brahman lady named Devānandā, the wife of the Brahman Rshabhadatta,<sup>1</sup> and, as usual with the lives of all such big prophets, there is a popular legend about Mahāvīra also that when the god Śakra (Indra), "the chief of kings and gods,"<sup>2</sup> came to know about this, it was arranged by him to transfer the embryo from Devānandā's womb to that of Kshatriyānī Trisālā, the wife of the Kshatriya king Siddhārtha of the Kāśyapa-Gotra, belonging to the clan of the Jñātri-Kshatriyas.<sup>3</sup> Although at the instance of a miracle, Mahāvīra ultimately belongs to Kshatriya origin.

Curiously enough this legend has been worked out in sculptures also. Some specimens of Jaina sculptures from Mathura bear testimony to it with an exactness which is really surprising, which fact shows that this legend can be traced historically to the very beginning of the Christian era, and therefore it can safely be said that it must have had some connection either with the life of Mahāvīra or that it must have been connected with one or the other social characteristics of those days.

We know from Kalpa-Sūtra that the god Indra had sent Harinegamesī to carry out this command of his.<sup>4</sup> This Harinegamesī is generally interpreted as "Negamesī of Hari"—i.e. "Negamesī, the servant of Indra."<sup>5</sup> Dr Buhler observes "A Jaina sculpture representing Narigamesa, a small Tīrthankara and a female with a small infant, can only be taken to refer to the most famous legend, in which the deity plays a part—viz the exchange of the embryos of Devānandā and Trisālā."<sup>6</sup>

On the very face of it this legend of Mahāvīra seems strange enough, but it must be admitted that tales stranger and more considered to be imperishable, indescribable, and undestroyable unless they take effect. Now Mahāvīra had committed the Karman relating to name and Gotra in one out of twenty-seven visible lives which he had to pass before he was destined to be born on this earth as the last Jaina prophet. It was because of this Karman that he had first to take his birth in the family of a Brahman. तच्च नोचिगोत्रं भगवता स्थूलसप्तविंशतिभवापेक्षया ज्ञातोय भवे चङ्ग — Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tikā, p. 26. Cf. also Jacobi, op cit, pp. 190, 191.

<sup>1</sup> ततश्च्युत्वा तेन नरोचिभवपदेन नोचिगोत्रकमेणा शुचभदस्य ब्राह्मणस्य देवानन्दाया. ब्राह्मणा कुक्षीं ययत्. — Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tikā, p. 29.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. S B E, xxii, p. 225.

<sup>3</sup> After eighty-two days the embryo was removed. सप्तविंशतिभवापेक्षया ज्ञातोय भवे चङ्ग — Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tikā, pp. 35, 36.

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, op cit, pp. 228 ff.

<sup>5</sup> Buhler, op cit, p. 316.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid, p. 317. Cf. also Mathura Sculptures, Plate II, A S R, xx, Plate IV, 2-5.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

legendary in nature also have been told by other religions about their own prophets. What strikes us most is not the nature of the tradition, but the spirit behind it. Does it mean, from this attitude on the part of the Jainas, that their monastical order was originally intended only for the Kshatriyas? It seems not, because, tracing from the days of Mahāvira down to our own times, we find that some of the greatest and most prominent figures of the Jaina fold were Brahmans as well. From Indriabhūti<sup>1</sup> down, right to the last Ganadhara of Mahāvira, all were Brahmans. Then in later history we have prominent Gurus and scholars like Siddhasena and Haribhadra who also were originally Brahmans.<sup>2</sup>

It may be that just at the beginning of the rationalistic period, when Brahmans were more or less at the height of their glory, and when other castes were getting more and more conscious of their previous subordination to Brahmans, this belief on the part of the Jainas got a certain definite form. The Buddhists also seem to have entertained a similar feeling, emphasising the prominence of the Kshatriya touch in their church. In one of his sermons at Benares, Buddha speaks of his religion as that "for the sake of which noble youths fully give up the world and go forth into the houseless state."<sup>3</sup>

With all this it must be borne in mind that the Jainas did not mind the Brahmans becoming Jaina Gurus and enjoying the highest posts in the Jaina church, but they made this distinction, that a born Brahman may become a Kṣetrī and attain Moksha, but he cannot become a Tirthankara. This may be just to wipe off the common belief of the people of those days that Brahmans alone were entitled to be at the top in all spiritual matters. We know from authentic sources that during the early days there was nothing like the Brahmans enjoying monopoly about religious and other ceremonial affairs. "Numerous instances have also been cited to show that men of low birth actually entered the priestly caste by <sup>1</sup> There is a legend about Indriabhūti which shows how much he was attached to his teacher. At the time of Mahāvira's death he was absent. On his return, hearing of his beloved teacher's sudden demise, he was overcome with grief. He became aware that the last remaining bond which tied him to the Samsāra was the feeling of love he still entertained for his teacher. Therefore he cut asunder that bond and thus Chin-napagalambham he reached the stage of Kṣetrī. He died a month after Mahāvira's Nirāṇa. Jacobi Kalpa Sūtra Int. p. 1.

<sup>2</sup> Siddhasena Divakara the son of a Brahman minister. Haribhadra was originally a learned Brahman. Stevenson (Mrs) op cit pp 76, 80.

<sup>3</sup> Rhys Davids in Oldenberg SBL vol. p. 93.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

their knowledge and virtues, that priestly caste did not acquire a monopoly of religious learning, that they often came as humble pupils to Kshatriya kings to acquire religious learning”<sup>1</sup> “They did not,” observes Tiele, “yet form an exclusive caste, for kings and kings’ sons are also designated as sacred singers, and perform priestly functions, though, like many of the nobles also, they generally had then house-priests (Purohīts)”<sup>2</sup>

Anyhow, as we have already remarked, in later history, by insinuations and pretensions, Brahmins came to be recognised as spiritual guardians and benefactors of society,<sup>3</sup> though “at any rate the older hymns contained occasional references to a Brahman or a Brahman’s son, in later hymns these are more numerous”<sup>4</sup> This might surely have moved the Kshatriyas and other castes to pull down the Brahmins from the heights of their self-acquired superiority and to deprive them of some of their many privileges

Dr Jacobi, in interpreting this particular incident of Mahāvīra’s life, seems to have drawn some far-fetched conclusions. He begins with the hypothesis that Siddhārtha, the father of Mahāvīra, had two wives—one the Kshatriyānī, Trīśālā, and the other the Brāhmaṇī, Devadattā. Furthermore, he believes that Mahāvīra was really born of Devadattā, but afterwards he was proclaimed to have been born of Trīśālā just with a view to get him the importance and greatness accruing from the aristocratic connection on his mother’s side, and to entitle him to the patronage of his relations.<sup>5</sup> We see no use in drawing imaginary inferences from such incidents as these that are connected with a prophet’s life, but we might get something from the atmosphere of the time in interpreting such a dogmatic assertion of the Jaina canonical books as that a Brahman can be everything but a Tirthankara

Thus Mahāvīra is believed to have been born of Trīśālā, near the town of Vaiśālī,<sup>6</sup> nearly twenty-seven miles north of Patna. His father, Siddhārtha, seems to have been a chieftain of

<sup>1</sup> Dutt, op cit, p. 264

<sup>2</sup> Tiele, op cit, p. 116. “Previous to the origin of caste, and even in the period when the functions were not yet stereotyped the king could sacrifice for himself and his subjects unaided”—Law, N. N., op cit, p. 41

<sup>3</sup> “They had frequently, however, to encounter grave resistance from the princes, generally, however, they contrived, either by assumption and arrogance or by cunning, to attain their end”—Tiele, op cit, p. 121

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, p. 115

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Jacobi, SBE, xxii, Int., p. xxxi

<sup>6</sup> This Vaiśālī is identified with the modern Besarh in the Hajipur subdivision of Muzaffarpur

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Kundagrāma village,<sup>1</sup> and his mother, Princess Trisalā, was the sister of the chieftain of Vaiśālī, the capital of Videha, and was related also to Bimbisāra king of Magadha.<sup>2</sup> In Nandivardhana and Sudarśanā he had his eldest brother and sister respectively. Mahāvīra was married to one Yaśodā, who belonged to the Koundinya Gotra, and he had by her a daughter named Anojjā, also called Priyadarśanā.<sup>3</sup> She was married to his nephew Rājaputra Jamāhi, "a future disciple of his father-in-law and the propagator of the first schism in the Jaina church."<sup>4</sup> Mahāvīra lived a householder's life till he was thirty years old, but just after the decease of his parents he left his home with the permission of his elder brother and entered the spiritual career,<sup>5</sup> "which in India just as the Church in the Western country, seems to have offered a field for ambitious younger sons."<sup>6</sup>

According to the Jaina belief Mahāvīra's parents were worshippers of Pārśva and followers of the Śramanas.<sup>7</sup> "Mahāvīra's doctrines are spoken of in the Sūtras not as his doctrines but decreta, or old-established truths—Punnattas. All this would be next to impossible if he had been like Buddha, the original founder of his religion, but it is just what one would expect to be the record of a reformer's life and preaching."<sup>8</sup> He is said to have been praised and hymned by both gods and men in the following sweet words: "Obtain the pre-eminent highest rank (i.e. final liberation) on that straight road which the Jinas have taught."<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "Just outside Vaiśālī lay the suburb Kundagrāma—probably surviving in the modern village of Basukund—and here lived a wealthy nobleman Siddhārtha, head of a certain warrior clan called the Tīrātrikas."—C H I, i, p. 157.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Frazer, op cit, pp. 128-131. According to the Jaina Sūtras Trisalā was called Videhadattā and Priyākārini and that is why Mahāvīra was called "Videhadatta's son." Cf. Jacobi, op cit, pp. 193, 194, 256.

<sup>3</sup> राजा समरपीरोष यशोर्ल कन्यका निजाम् । प्रतापुं यथेमानाय भर्तुर्दशोत्तयामनायत ।
दुहिता प्रियदर्शना ॥—Hemacandra, Trishashti-Salākā Parva X vv. 127, 154 p. 16.

<sup>4</sup> Charpentier, C H I, i, p. 158. राजपुत्रो । जमालिः । प्रियदर्शनाम् ॥—Hemacandra, op cit, v. 153 p. 17.

<sup>5</sup> समणो भगव महावीरो तोसं वासाइ कहुं विदेहंसि मुडे भविता, etc.—Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā, pp. 89, 96.

<sup>6</sup> महावीरस्स जम्मापियरो पामायच्चिक्खा etc.—Ācāranga pt. II, sūt. 178, p. 422. Cf. Jacobi, op cit, p. 194. "His parents had, according to a tradition which seems trustworthy been followers of Pārśva, the previous Tirthankara, as has already been pointed out the doctrine of Mahāvīra was scarcely anything else than a modified or renovated form of Pārśva's creed."—Charpentier op cit p. 160.

<sup>7</sup> Jacobi, I A, ix, p. 161.

<sup>8</sup> Jacobi, S B E, xxii, p. 258. "He had proclaimed the highest law of the Jinas."—Ibid, xlv, p. 288.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

Having left the house, Mahāvīra went through the usual career of an ascetic. He wandered for more than twelve years, resting only during the rainy-season<sup>1</sup>. For about the first thirteen months "the venerable ascetic Mahāvīra wore clothes"<sup>2</sup>. After that time he walked about naked, casting aside every kind of garment. By uninterrupted meditation, unbroken chastity and the most scrupulous observation of the rules concerning eating and drinking he fully subdued his senses. He was out to neglect his body for twelve years, and with equanimity he was prepared to bear, undergo and suffer all calamities arising from any sources<sup>3</sup>. Thus it is but natural that in a state of forgetfulness as this, Mahāvīra was not conscious whether or not he was dressed. There was nothing like any deliberate move on his part that he should go about naked. The robe that he was putting on during his wanderings was taken away from him in halves by some Brahman friend of his father named Soma<sup>4</sup>. What came in the prophet's life in a more or less unconscious state of his mind was not meant to be literally adopted by his followers. There is no such rigidity visible in the canonical literature of the Jainas. In the Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra the following words are put in the mouth of Sudharman: "'My clothes being torn, I shall (soon) go naked,' or 'I shall get a new suit', such thoughts should not be entertained by a monk

"At one time he will have no clothes, at another he will have some, knowing this to be a salutary rule, a wise (monk) should not complain about it"<sup>5</sup>. In short, it comes to this, that a monk should be indifferent to all such superficialities. With all this, the general rule adopted for the discipline of the whole class was that monks should try to get on with one cloth, and if essential they may keep two<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> "When the rainy-season has come and it is raining, many living beings are originated and man, seeds just spring up. Knowing this (state of things) one should not wander from village to village, but remain during the rainy season in one place"—Jacobi, SBE, xxii, p. 138.

<sup>2</sup> सन्तो भगवन् महावीरे संवत्सर साहस्य मासं जीवरधारी हुत्वा तेषां परं जपेत्तु पाणिपङ्क्तिगृह्यह. —Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, sūt 117, p. 98. Cf. SBE, xxii, pp. 259, 260.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. ibid., p. 200.

<sup>4</sup> ततः पिपुतित्रेण ब्राह्मणेन गृहीतं —Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā, p. 98. Cf. Hcmacandra, op cit., v. 2, p. 19.

<sup>5</sup> Jacobi, SBE, xlv, p. 11.

<sup>6</sup> Jacobi, SBE, xxii, p. 157. "The Jaina rules about dress are not so simple, for they allow a Jaina monk to go naked or to wear one, two or three garments, but a young strong monk should as a rule wear but one robe. Mahāvīra went about naked, and so

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Twelve years thus spent in self-penance and meditation were not fruitless. "During the thirteenth year Mahāvira . . ., not far from an old temple . . ., under a Sāla-tree, being engaged in deep meditation, reached the highest knowledge and intuition, called Kevala, which is infinite, supreme, unobstructed, unimpeded, complete, and full" <sup>1</sup>

During these twelve years of preparatory self-mortification Vardhamāna had gone through numerous places, most of which are very difficult to identify to-day. Roaming about in countries inhabited by savage tribes, rarely having a shelter in which to rest for a night, and visiting even wild tribes of the country called Lādha, he had to endure the most painful and dangerous treatment from the barbarous inhabitants <sup>2</sup>. Thereafter he was recognised as omniscient, as a Kevalin comprehending all subjects, and as an Arhat for whom there is no secret in this world to learn <sup>3</sup>. By this time he was already forty-two, and the remaining thirty years of his life he passed in teaching his religious system, organising his order of ascetics, and wandering about preaching his doctrines and making converts. He apparently visited all the great towns of north and south Bihar, dwelling principally in the kingdoms of Magadha and Anga. Most of the rainy-seasons were spent round about his native town, Vaiśālī <sup>4</sup>, at Rājagṛha, the old capital of Magadha, at Campā, <sup>5</sup> the capital of ancient Anga, at Mithilā, the kingdom of Videha, and at Śrāvastī <sup>6</sup>.

did the Jinakaipikas, or those who tried to imitate him as much as possible. But they also were allowed to cover their nakedness"—Ibid, Int., p. xxvi.

<sup>1</sup> Ibid, p. 268. Cf. ibid, p. 201.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Charpentier, op cit, p. 158, Radhakrishnan, op cit, p. 287. "Mahāvira wandered for more than twelve years in Lādha, in Vajjabhūmi and Subhabhūmi, the Rādha of to-day in Bengal"—Dey, The Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Mediaeval India, p. 108. According to Dr Bühler the Rārā of to-day in Bengal. Cf. Bühler, Indian Sects of the Jainas, p. 26.

<sup>3</sup> "Under the name of Kunda-gāma the city of Vaiśālī is mentioned as the birthplace of Mahāvira, the Jain Tirthankara, who was also called Vesali, or the man of Vaiśālī"—Dey, op cit, p. 107.

<sup>4</sup> Campā is a very sacred place to the Jainas, inasmuch as it was the resort of Mahāvira for three rainy seasons during his wanderings. It is known also as the birthplace and the place of death of Vāsudeva, the twelfth Tirthankara of the Jainas. Cf. ibid, p. 44.

<sup>5</sup> "Śrāvastī, also called Sahet-Mahet, is the Candrapura or Candrikāpurī of the Jainas. It is known as the birthplace of the third Tirthankara Sambhavanātha and the eighth Tirthankara Candraprabha of the Jainas"—ibid, p. 190. "In that period in that age the venerable ascetic Mahāvira stayed the 1st rainy-season in Anthikagrāma, three rainy seasons in Campā and Prushti-Campā, twelve in Vaiśālī and Vanjagrāma, fourteen in Rājagṛha and the suburb of Nālandā . . ., one in Śrāvastī, one in the town of Pāṭā in King Hastupāla's office of the writers"—Jacobi, op cit, p. 264.

O R I G I N A L P H O T O G R A P H OF THE DEITY
 FROM THE COLLECTION OF THE
 THE P. H. R. S. OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
 THE P. H. R. S. OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
 THE P. H. R. S. OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

"His wanderings seem to have covered a wide area, and on occasions he visited Rājagṛha, the capital of Magadha, and other towns, where the utmost honour was shown to him"<sup>1</sup> Furthermore, looking to the schisms in the Jaina church in his own day, the number of Mahāvīra's followers, as believed by the Jainas, does in no way discredit him. He had an excellent community of 14,000 Śramanas, 36,000 nuns, 159,000 male lay-votaries, 318,000 female lay-votaries, and something like 5400 others who either knew the fourteen Pūrvas or were Kevalins, and so on<sup>2</sup>

Thus having become a Kevalin at the age of forty-two at Jṛmbhikagrāma,<sup>3</sup> situated on the River Rijupālikā, near the Pārasnāth hills, and having wandered for about thirty years as a reformer in the Jaina church, Lord Mahāvīra died at the age of seventy-two<sup>4</sup> in the house of King Hastipāla's scribe in Pāvāpurī,<sup>5</sup> near Rājagṛha, a place still visited by thousands of Jaina pilgrims. According to the traditional Jaina chronology this event is believed to have taken place in the year 527 B.C., differing by sixteen years from the Nirvāṇa of Buddha according to the chronology of Ceylon, or 543 B.C.<sup>6</sup> This date of Mahāvīra is based on three verses repeated in many commentaries and chronological works<sup>7</sup> "These verses, which are quoted in a large number of commentaries and chronological works, but the origin of which is by no means clear, give the adjustment between the eras of Vira and Vikrama, and form the basis of the earlier Jaina chronology"<sup>8</sup> Merutunga's<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier, op. cit. and loc. cit. "The extent of his sphere of influence almost corresponds with that of the kingdom of Śrāvastī or Kosala, Videha, Magadha, and Anga—the modern Oudh, and the provinces of Tirhut and Bihar in western Bengal"—Bühler, op. cit., p. 27

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, op. cit., pp. 267-268

<sup>3</sup> Also called Jṛmbhikagrāma or Jṛmbhikā—Stevenson (Mrs.), op. cit., p. 38

<sup>4</sup> "Mahāvīra lived thirty years as a householder, more than twelve years in a state inferior to perfection, something less than thirty years as a Kevalin, forty two years as a monk—seventy two years on the whole"—Jacobi, op. cit., p. 269

<sup>5</sup> Pāvā-Pāvāpurī, about seven miles to the south east of Bihar (town) and two miles to the north of Giriyeś. According to Stevenson's Kalpa Sūtra, Mahāvīra died here while he was spending the Paryuṣana (Pūjyūṣana) at the palace of Hastipāla, king of Pāvā. There are four beautiful Jaina temples in an enclosure which marks the site of his death. Annual (Dipāvālī) Divālī was started to commemorate Mahāvīra's death. Cf. Day, op. cit. p. 148

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Jacobi, Kalpa Sūtra, Int., p. 8

<sup>7</sup> "None of the sources in which these announcements appear is older than the twelfth century A.D. The latest is found in Hemacandra, who died in the year 1172 A.D."—Bühler, op. cit., p. 28

<sup>8</sup> Bühler, I.A., II, p. 368

<sup>9</sup> "Merutunga, a famous Jaina author, composed in v.s. 1361 = 1804 A.D. his work the Prabandhacintāmaṇi and about two years later his Vidyaśreṇi."—Charpentier, I.A., xlii, p. 119

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Vicāraśreni is based on them, and they specify 470 years as the interval between Vikramāditya and the Nirvāna of Mahāvīra

The translation of the three verses is as follows<sup>1</sup>

1 Pālaka, the Lord of Avantī, was anointed during that night in which the Arhat and Tirthankara Mahāvīra entered Nirvāna

2 Sixty are (the years) of King Pālaka, but one hundred and fifty-five are (the years) of the Nandas, one hundred and eight those of the Mauryas, and thirty those of Pusamitra (Pushyamitra)

3 Sixty (years) ruled Balamitra and Bhānumitra, forty Nabhoḥana, thirteen years likewise lasted the rule of Gardabhilla, and four are the years of Śaka<sup>2</sup>

Thus, according to Merutunga 470 years elapsed between the Nirvāna and Vikramāditya's era, which corresponds to 527 B.C. of the Christian era<sup>3</sup>. In coming to this period of 470 years according to Merutunga, we get 255 years as the interval between the beginning of the era of Vikrama and the reign of the Mauryas. This comes to 312 B.C. as the date of Candragupta's Abhisheka, according to the Jaina tradition<sup>4</sup>. Now, subtracting 255 from 470 we get 215 years as the period between Candragupta and the Nirvāna. This period of 215 years is not subscribed to by all, for Hemacandra, in his Parishstaparcān, writes "And thus 155 years after the liberation of Mahāvīra Candragupta became king"<sup>5</sup>. Adding 155 to 312 B.C. we get the Nirvāna of Mahāvīra in 467 B.C. Merutunga no doubt refers to this statement of Hemacandra but about it he says nothing more than that it is in contradiction with other works<sup>6</sup>.

The date of Mahāvīra as worked out by Jacobi<sup>7</sup> and Charpentier<sup>8</sup> is based on the data supplied by these two Jaina Gurus. Both the

<sup>1</sup> That they were not composed by Merutunga himself or any of his contemporaries is certain because at that time the Jaina authors had long ago ceased to write in Prākṛt. —Charpentier, op cit p. 120

<sup>2</sup> अर्यपति कालगणना समस्त राज्ञः —Vicāraśreni, p. 1 MS, BORIL, No. 378 of 1871-1872

<sup>3</sup> Fifty-seven years elapsed between the commencement of the Samvat and the Christian eras

<sup>4</sup> "The Jaina authorities give the year of his accession as 312 (312) B.C., a date at which the canon of the Jaina scriptures was fixed. —CH I, 1 p. 698

<sup>5</sup> एष च श्रीमहावीर चन्द्रगुप्तमवसृज्य —Jacobi Parishstaparcān (Canto VIII, v. 339)

<sup>6</sup> तच्चिन्त्यं यत् एष ६० वर्षाणि बुद्धयति । अन्यस्यै सह विरोधः. —Vicāraśreni, op cit, p. 1

<sup>7</sup> Jacobi Kalpa Sūtra Int., pp. 6-10

<sup>8</sup> Charpentier, op cit, pp. 118, 123, 125, 133, 167, 178

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

learned scholars have worked out their conclusions with so much minuteness and historical accuracy that we need not repeat here the grounds put forward by them for justifying their opinions. They rightly agree in accepting the chronological fact put forward by Hemacandra, and come to the inevitable conclusion that the date of this epoch must be somewhere about 467 B C <sup>1</sup>

"I have tried to show," says Charpentier, "that the chronological list on which the Jainas found this assumption of a period of 470 years between the death of Mahāvīra and the commencement of the Vikrama era is almost entirely valueless. The line of rulers composed in order to fill up the time is wholly unhistorical and can by no means be trusted." <sup>2</sup> Leaving aside the wholly hypothetical basis of the Jaina tradition, the other grounds put forward by the eminent scholars are the contemporary existence of both Mahāvīra and Buddha, and the more trustworthy historical facts put forward by Hemacandra.

That the two prophets were different persons, contemporaries and founders of rival communities of monks, is now an established fact. "But, if we believed the Jaina tradition to be right, when it asserts the death of Mahāvīra to have taken place 470 years before Vikrama, or 527 B C, we might doubt whether this is possible. For the death of Buddha, the date of which was first, and in my opinion rightly, fixed by General Cunningham and Professor Max Muller, occurred in 477 B C, and as all sources are unanimous in telling us that he was then 80 years old, he must have been born in 557 B C. From this it is clear that if Mahāvīra died in 527 B C Buddha at that stage was only 30 years of age, and as he did not attain Buddhahood and gained no followers before his 36th year—i.e. about 521 B C—it is quite impossible that he should never have met Mahāvīra. Moreover, both are stated to have lived during the reign of Ajātaśatru, who became king eight years before the death of Buddha, and reigned <sup>1</sup> No doubt there are other scholars who hold the contrary opinion but their discussions having been rendered obsolete by Jacobi and Charpentier we shall not dwell upon them any further. Just to mention a few amongst them: Burgess, I A, ii, p. 140, Rice (Lewis), I A, iii, p. 157. Thomas (Edward), I A, viii, p. 30. Pathak I A, xii, p. 21, Hoernle, I A, xx, p. 360, Guerinot, Bibliographie Jaina, Int., p. vii, and so on.

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, p. 125. "Not only is the number of years (155) allotted in the Gāthās to the reign of the Nandas unduly great, but also the introduction of Pālaka, Lord of Avanti, in the chronology of the Magadha kings looks very suspicious."—Jacobi, op cit, p. 8.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

32 years, this makes it even more impossible to believe in the dates mentioned above”<sup>1</sup>

Coming to Hemacandra's statement in his Parīṣiṣṭaparvan, Dr Charpentier says “We may assume with Jacobi that he (Hemacandra) took as correct the tradition of 255 years elapsing between the accession of Candragupta and the Vikrama era. This would then make the time between the death of Mahāvīra and the accession of Vikrama till  $255 + 155 = 410$  years, and involve the conclusion that Mahāvīra died in 467 B C, which in my opinion is the date best fitted for all circumstances connected with it, and may be deemed the right one”<sup>2</sup>

Over and above these there are also other considerations, which in one way or the other help us to come to this date of Mahāvīra's death. We need no more discuss them here, but just to enumerate the traditional date of Bhadrabāhu's death and his connection with Candragupta<sup>3</sup>, the date of the third schism in the Jaina church and its relation with the Maurya king, Balabhadra<sup>4</sup>, the connection between the date put in the Kalpa-Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu as finally settled by Devardhiganiṇ and the date of the great council held at Vallabhī in the year of Dhruvasena's succession,<sup>5</sup> and finally the date of Suhastin, the disciple of Sthūlabhadra and his connection with Samprati,<sup>6</sup> grandson and successor of Aśoka.<sup>7</sup>

With such historical data before us one thing is clear, that the conclusion which we have arrived at is quite in harmony with the <sup>1</sup> Charpentier, op cit, pp 131-132. “To return to our discussions of the date of the Nirvāṇa, it is obvious that the year 467 B C which we inferred from Hemacandra's record, cannot be far wrong, because it agrees so well with the adjusted date of Buddha's Nirvāṇa, 477 B C, a synchronism which by our previous research has been established as necessary” — Jacobi op cit, p 9.

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, p 175.

<sup>3</sup> This date of Bhadrabāhu's death is 170 A V, which is equal to 357 B C according to the traditional date, and 297 according to the date of Jacobi and Charpentier, and considering Bhadrabāhu's connection with Candragupta the year 357 B C is to be totally excluded.

<sup>4</sup> This schism originated in 214 A V, and according to Merutunga the Maurya rule dates from 215 A V, and hence Hemacandra's calculations, according to which the Maurya dynasty begins 155 years after the Nirvāṇa, seem more reasonable.

<sup>5</sup> That date is either 980 or 993 A V, which, taking 467 B C as the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa, is equal to 526 A D, which exactly corresponds to the year of Dhruvasena's succession to the throne of Vallabhī.

<sup>6</sup> This date is 245 A V according to Merutunga, and this more or less agrees with the chronology of Hemacandra, according to which Candragupta began his rule in 155 A V, because, as Aśoka died ninety-four years after Candragupta, the date of Samprati comes to 249 A V.

<sup>7</sup> Cf Charpentier, op cit, pp 175-176, Jacobi, op cit, pp 9-10.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

various facts connected with and depending upon the date under consideration. Still, however, 467 B C cannot be taken as the real year of Mahāvīra's death, though it cannot be far wrong, because there is no ground to assume that Hemacandra took as correct the tradition that two hundred and fifty-five years elapsed between the accession of Candragupta and the Vikrama era, and thereby came to the conclusion that according to the Jaina tradition Candragupta began his dynasty in 312 B C. No doubt a precise date for the accession of Candragupta seems, with our present evidence, impossible<sup>1</sup>, but still, without dwelling further upon a matter of so much uncertainty, an earlier date seems more reasonable and more in keeping with the contemporary historical atmosphere and with certain events of Candragupta's own life. Scholars like Dr Thomas (F W),<sup>2</sup> Smith<sup>3</sup> and others agree in putting Candragupta's succession from 325–321 B C, or thereabout<sup>4</sup>. Taking this as our basis, we get c 480–467 B C as the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāna, and this fits in with the adjusted date of Buddha's Nirvāna, 477 B C, "which has been proved correct within very narrow limits"<sup>5</sup>. This is because it is obvious that the Nirvāna of both these teachers can be separated by a few years only<sup>6</sup>. Moreover, the acceptance of some such period for the Nirvāna of Vardhamāna in no way contradicts any of the considerations that we have already put forth.

However, before we pass on to the reformed Jaina church of Mahāvīra, we shall have to say a few words on the misunderstanding of the revolution that had been brought about in the chronology of this period by the so-called correct evidence as put forward by Mr Jayaswal, Mr Banerji and others<sup>7</sup>. As we shall see in our chapter entitled "Jainism in Kalinga Deśa," until very recently it was believed, by these scholars, with Vincent Smith<sup>8</sup> and others,

<sup>1</sup> "Our defective knowledge of the chronology is in striking contrast to the trustworthy information which we possess concerning the country and its administration"—Thomas (F W), CHI, i, p 473

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, pp 471–472

<sup>3</sup> Smith, Early History of India, p 206 (4th ed)

<sup>4</sup> "The date of Candragupta's accession has been fixed by Professor Kern between 321 and 322, accordingly the date of the Nirvāna is somewhere between 477 and 475 B C, and this date is probably correct within a few years, as it nearly agrees with the adjusted date of Buddha's Nirvāna in 477 B C"—Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭaparvan, Int, p 6

<sup>5</sup> Jacobi, op and loc cit

<sup>6</sup> Cf Dasgupta, op cit, i, p 173

<sup>7</sup> Jayaswal, J B O R S, iii, pp 425–472, and iv, pp 364 ff, Banerji (R D), J B O R S, iii, pp 486 ff

<sup>8</sup> Smith, J R A S, 1918, pp 543–547

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

that the inscription of Khāravela was dated in the year 165 of the Maurya era, Rāja-Muriya Kāle, equivalent to 170 B.C. The significance of the date of the record was emphasised by a reference in another passage to some Nandarāja having excavated a canal in Kalinga three hundred years earlier—that is to say, 470 B.C.<sup>1</sup> This Nandarāja being identified with Nandivardhana, the ninth Śaśunāga king, whose date was previously taken as about 418 B.C., Smith went to the extent of revolutionising the whole Śaśunāga chronology, and put c. 554 B.C. for the previous 491 B.C. of Ajātaśatru, and c. 582 B.C. for c. 519 B.C. of Bimbisāra.<sup>2</sup> From this change in the chronology of the contemporary dynasty of both Buddha and Mahāvira, and from a reference in the body of the inscription about an image of Jina being taken away by a Nanda king, both Smith<sup>3</sup> and Jayaswal<sup>4</sup> came to the conclusion that the Khāravela record supports the old traditional dates for the death of Mahāvira, 527 B.C., and the death of Buddha, 543 B.C.

As we shall see later on, all these inferences based on the Khāravela inscription are of no account considering the latest reading suggested by Mr. Jayaswal. According to it there is nothing like any reference to the Maurya era, but this factor is of very little importance, because we come practically to the same date of the inscription, taking into consideration the reference made to the great Indo-Greek king, Demetrius. The most significant change that has been brought about is that the canal referred to was excavated in the year 103 of the Nanda era and not three hundred years earlier.<sup>5</sup> Thus the sole basis on which Mr. Smith hurriedly took the step of pushing back the whole Śaśunāga chronology by something like fifty years now falls to the ground. "I have been so impressed," said the great historian, "by the new

<sup>1</sup> Smith J.R.A.S., 1918, p. 546.

<sup>2</sup> "In the third edition of my Early History of India (1914) I placed the accession of Nandivardhana doubtfully about 418 B.C. He must now go back to c. 470 B.C., or possibly to an earlier date. That finding involves putting back Ajātaśatru or Kunika (No. 5 Śaśunāga) to at least c. 554 B.C. and his father Bimbisāra or Śrenika (No. 4) to at least c. 582 B.C."—Smith, op. cit., pp. 546-547. In his first edition (1904) Smith has put 401 B.C. for Nandivardhana, p. 33, see ibid. p. 41, ibid., p. 51 (4th ed. 1924).

<sup>3</sup> "According to Pāli tradition Mahāvira predeceased Buddha. But other reasons support the date 467 B.C., as advocated by Charpentier, and this fits in with the traditional date of Bhadrabāhu, who was the contemporary of Candragupta Maurya. The year 527 (526-7) B.C. the most commonly quoted date for the death of Mahāvira, is merely one of several dates, but it is supported by the Khāravela inscription"—Ibid., p. 49. Cf. ibid., p. 50.

<sup>4</sup> Jayaswal, J.B.O.R.S., xiii, p. 240.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., pp. 221 ff.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

evidence, that in my forthcoming book, The Oxford History of India, now being printed, I have inserted earlier periods for the Śaśunāgas and Nandas,"<sup>1</sup> but now the very person (Jayaswal) who was rightly relied upon to this extent by Mr Smith, and who deserves greater credit for keeping up to his conviction, has more or less completely altered his first reading of the inscription after working at it for a pretty long time.

Coming to Jayaswal, he says "It also proves that to have Jina images about or rather before 450 B.C. means that the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa must be what we get from the various Jaina chronological data read with the Purāṇic and Pāli material, which all harmonise in fixing it to be 545 B.C." <sup>2</sup> This sounds rather strange. There is no reason why this King Nanda referred to here should be identified particularly with Nandivardhana, the Śaśunāga whose era has been identified by Jayaswal with the Nanda era referred to above on the basis of Alberuni and other historical grounds.<sup>3</sup>

This King Nanda, as we shall see in our next chapter, is, according to Dr Charpentier, better identified with one of the Nine Nandas, the first of whom "seems not to be very unfavourably judged by Hemacandra."<sup>4</sup> If this identification is accepted, the historical period of having Jaina images would be somewhere in the very beginning of the fourth century B.C. Even granting that this King Nanda is to be identified with Nandivardhana, whose date, according to Jayaswal, comes to about 457 B.C., there is no historical fallacy committed or any Jaina tradition disregarded if we say that there must have been Jaina images about or rather before 450 B.C. There is no reason why, just because of this, the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvīra cannot be somewhere about 467 B.C., and should go so far back as 545 B.C., because, according to so many traditions, whether right or wrong, image-worship is no new development in the Jaina church.<sup>5</sup>

But the fixing of 545 B.C. as the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa is nothing else but disregarding some of the real historical facts

<sup>1</sup> Smith, J R A S, 1918, p. 547

<sup>2</sup> Jayaswal, op cit, p. 246. This date of Jayaswal is based also on the chronological facts that he has worked out after consulting the Pāli, Purāṇic and Burmese traditions. Cf. J B O R S, I, p. 114.

<sup>3</sup> Jayaswal, J B O R S, xiii, pp. 240-241.

<sup>4</sup> Charpentier, op cit, pp. 171-172.

<sup>5</sup> तद एव सा दोष ई रायवरकका जेवेष निशपरे निशपडिनाथं पयानं करेह -
Jñāta, sūta 119, p. 210

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

and coincidences of the Jaina annals. It is true no doubt that this period of Indian history is chequered with numerous traditions, Jaina, Buddhist or Hindu, and sometimes because of some or the other interest or object in view they are so arranged by later writers that it has become an impossible task to find out the real truth behind the whole show. Now, according to the Jaina tradition, the whole interval between Ajātaśatru and Candragupta has been filled up by Udāyin and the Nine Nandas,<sup>1</sup> while writers like Merutunga tell us that the Nanda rule lasted for one hundred and fifty-five years. On the other hand Hemacandra has allotted only ninety-five years for the Nandas, by which he rightly means the Nine Nandas. However, the chronological period of 480-467 B.C. that we have put down for Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa is—as is often inevitable in our efforts to reconstruct the mosaic of ancient Indian history from the few pieces which have as yet been found—an attempt to do little more than define the limits of possible hypothesis in this instance. For greater certainty we must be content to wait until the progress of archaeological research has furnished us with more adequate materials.

III

* Coming to the reformed Jaina church of Mahāvīra or Jainism as such we find that it is not possible to talk at length about that either. All that can be done within a limited scope like this is to mark its salient features and its beliefs about the ordinary problems, inquiries and difficulties of a man's spiritual life. Reflection is the moving spirit of philosophy. Early philosophical reflection engages itself with searching for the origin of the world, and it attempts to formulate the law of causation. In this respect Jainism is atheistic, if by atheism we understand the belief that there is no eternal supreme God, Creator and Lord of all things. "The atheism of the Jainas means denial of a divine creative spirit."<sup>2</sup> The Jainas flatly deny such a supreme God, but they believe in the eternity of existence, universality of life, immutability of the Law of Karma, and supreme intelligence as the means to self-liberation.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Rapson CHI, 1, p. 313.

<sup>2</sup> Hopkins, op. cit., pp. 285-286. "The only real gods are their chiefs or teachers, whose idols are worshipped in the temples"—Ibid.

MAHAVIRA AND HIS TIMES

To the Jainas there is no need to assume any first cause of the universe<sup>1</sup> They deny the existence of an intelligent first cause<sup>2</sup> and repudiate the theory of the creation of the world out of nothing or out of a series of accidents To the Jaina thinker the systematic working of the law of nature cannot be a product of luck or accident He cannot conceive how a non-creative God suddenly becomes creative "If God created the universe," asks Ācārya Jinasena, "where was he before creating it? If he was not in space, where did he localise the universe? How could a formless or immaterial substance like God create the world of matter? If the material is to be taken as existing, why not take the world itself as unbegun? If the creator was uncreated, why not suppose the world to be itself self-existing?" Then he continues "Is God self-sufficient? If he is, he need not have created the world If he is not, like an ordinary potter, he would be incapable of the task, since, by hypothesis, only a perfect being could produce it If God created the world as a mere play of his will, it would be making God childish If God is benevolent and if he has created the world out of his grace, he would not have brought into existence misery as well as felicity"<sup>3</sup>

If it is argued that everything that exists must have a maker, then that maker himself would stand in need of another maker, and we would be landed in a cycle, the way from which to escape is to assume the reality of a self-subsisting maker who is the author of everything else. Here again is raised the problem that if it is possible for one being to be self-subsistent and eternal, is it not possible for more things and beings to be uncreated and substantive? Then the Jaina mind puts forth the hypothesis of a number of substances, and the world is explained on the theory of the necessity of all substances to manifest themselves "The whole universe of being, of mental and material factors has existed from all eternity, undergoing an infinite number of revolutions produced

कर्तासि कश्चिद् जगत् स चेत्
स सर्वैः स स्वयज्ञः स निव ।
इत्था कुहेयाकविहम्बना म्यु -
स्तथा न येवानुज्ञासकस्त्वन् ॥ ६ ॥

Hemacandra, Syādvādamāñjarī (ed Motilal Ladhaj), v 6, p 24, see ibid, pp 14 ff

<sup>2</sup> Radhakrishnan, op cit, 1, p 280 Cf also Vijayadharmsūri, Bhandarkar Commemorative Volume, pp 150-151

<sup>3</sup> Latthe, Introduction to Jainism, pp 85-87, Jinasena, Ādi Purāna, chap iii Cf Bhandarkar, Report on Sanskrit MSS, 1883-1884, p 118

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

by the powers of nature without the intervention of any external deity. The diversities of the world are traced to the five co-operating conditions of time (Kāla), nature (Svabhāva), necessity (Niyati), activity (Karma), and desire to be and act (Udyama)”<sup>1</sup>

With all this such a belief on the part of the Jainas did not make them materialistic in the sense of one of the inchoate philosophical systems called “materialism,” or in the sense of Cārvāka, whose motto was to make merry while life lasted, since he thought that the body turned to ashes turns not to life again. In his manual on Jainism Mr Warren has nicely put the difference between the Jaina and these philosophical systems of thought. “An alternative to the doctrine of a kind of almighty creator governing the universe,” says the learned scholar, “is the theory of soulless materialist atheism which affirms that life and consciousness are the outcome of the massing and activity of material atoms, to be dissipated at death, but for those who find neither of these theories satisfactory there is the theory roughly outlined in this book, a theory which neither denies the existence of the soul nor starts with the presumption of a creator, but makes each individual the master of his own destiny, holds out immortality for every living being, and insists upon the very highest rectitude of life, up to final perfection, as a necessary means to permanent happiness now and hereafter”<sup>2</sup>

Here arises the question, if there is no such being distinct from the world called God, what are the characteristics of the authority which is implicitly believed by the Jainas? Unless the characteristics are known it may come to believing the words of an arbitrary and tyrannical law-giver. Furthermore, however the authority may be true, teaching presupposes true knowledge. Going to the very root of religion we find that the definition of religion as the relation between man and superhuman powers in which he believes is by no means philosophical, nor does it in any sense apply to Jainism. On the other hand it leaves unanswered the question of the essence of religion. “Man’s desire for an explanation of the existence of misery, for its relief to extinction, and for a consequent increase of happiness, is the ground of religion”<sup>3</sup>. The powers mentioned above are designedly not described as super-

<sup>1</sup> Radhakrishnan, op cit, p. 380

<sup>2</sup> Warren, Jainism, p. 2. “Man! Thou art thine own friend, why wishest thou for a friend beyond thyself?”—Jacobi, S B E, xxi, p. 33

<sup>3</sup> Warren, op cit, p. 1

THE TWELVE AVASTHĀS OF KĀPĀLA MAHĀTĀNTRA

From a Palimpsest MS. of the Kāpāla Sūtra of the Thirteenth Century

From the collection of the Samasti

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

sensual, as visible deities would thus be excluded, and moreover they are superhuman, never in reality but in the estimation of the worshippers<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless this is a weakness which is more or less universal, and hence, naturally, the Jainas are not expected to be free from it Leaving this aside, we have already seen that Jainism is, as it were, a pure and perfect light thrown over the world by one who has subdued all his senses and passions, and who has thereby become free from all Karmas<sup>2</sup>

The Sāstras that form the fundamental basis of Jainism are based on the teaching of such spiritual leaders as Pārśva and Mahāvīra, who once lived on earth in flesh and blood Their teaching was first imparted to Ganadharas,<sup>3</sup> who were the chief disciples of Jina, the omnipotent seer of the universal and infinite light, while they in their turn handed it over to a line of Gurus who come down to our own days<sup>4</sup> Thus it is with these Jinās that lies the source of all that we are going to say about Jainism in the following pages

The sources for this are no doubt of a comparatively later date, and it is not difficult to distinguish between what was original and what was transformed For, as Charpentier has rightly observed, "the inflexible conservatism of the small Jaina community in holding fast to its original institutions and doctrine" has been its strongest safeguard<sup>5</sup>, and it is this conservatism that, in spite of periods of severe afflictions, has enabled the Jainas to preserve their canons to a large extent untainted There are indications in bas-reliefs of the first and the second century A D of their authenticity, going back to a much earlier period, and its oldest elements "may very well go back to the time of the first disciple of Mahāvīra, or at any rate to the council of Pāṭaliputra, which was held, according to tradition, under the Maurya king,

<sup>1</sup> Cf Tiele, op cit, p 2

<sup>2</sup> जिनेन्द्रो रागद्वेषविजितः कालकर्मक्षय कृत्वा संश्रान् परमं वदन् —Haribhadra, Saddarśana Samuccaya, vv 45, 46 "It is the opinion of Jainism that only that knowledge is true which is purged of the infatuating elements of anger, hatred, or other passions, that only he who is all-knowing is able to map out the path of rectitude which shall lead to final beatitude in life everlasting, and that omniscience is impossible in any in whom the infatuating elements are found to exist"—Warren, op cit, p 3

<sup>3</sup> Beginning from Indrabhūti and ending with Prabhava, Mahāvīra had altogether eleven Ganadharas

<sup>4</sup> प्रज्ञानशालस्य श्रीजिनचरेन्द्रायेष्टयाचर्यत आत्मगमनं तन्निष्ठं तु पञ्चमगणधरं सुधर्मं तन्निष्ठं च जंघु परम्यरागमता प्रतिविपादयिषुः सूचकारः आह —Jñāna, Tīkṣā, p 1

<sup>5</sup> Charpentier, CH I, i, p 169

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

and power covered with a thin veil of Karma matter which has been accumulating in them from beginningless time. The natural qualities of the soul are thus more or less obscured, and consequently various conditions of weal (Punya) and woe (Pāpa) are experienced. This is how we get the next two categories—viz Punya and Pāpa.

In Punya we include those matters that are connected with the soul and are the result of good and virtuous actions. Those that are contradictory to these are called Pāpas.<sup>1</sup> Punya is the meritorious kind of Karma, while Pāpa is the sinful kind of it. When the soul is thus striving under such auspicious (Subha) and inauspicious (Asubha) Karmas it is helped by the activity of the mind, speech and body, which fact either helps the inflow of such Karmic matter and thereby the soul gets bound to them, or acts as a bar to it. It is here that we get Āsrava, Samvara and Bandha.

The activity of the mind, speech and body which makes the inflow of Karmic matter into the soul possible is technically called Āsrava, while the same sort of activity which acts as a bar to such an inflow is called Samvara. The actual investing of the soul by this matter is called Bandha.<sup>2</sup> Thus according to the Jaina Mata it is we who are responsible for our own condition. "In whatever degree we are ignorant, in pain, unhappy, unkind, cruel or weak, it is because, since birth and even previously in the infinite past, we are and have been acquiring and incorporating into ourselves (Āsrava, Bandha)—by the attraction and assimilation of subtle, unseen, though real physical matter (Pudgala)—energies (Karma) which clog the natural wisdom, knowledge, blissfulness, love, compassion and strength of the soul, and which excite us to unnatural action."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> पुण्यं सत्कर्मपुद्गला ।—Haribhadra, op cit, v 49 पापं तद्विपरीतं तु —Ibid, v 50

<sup>2</sup> निष्कान्तास्त्रास्तु हेतवः ।

यत्किंचिन्मूलं तं विज्ञेयं चाश्रयो जिनज्ञासने ॥

सवरसज्ञिरोधस्तु बन्धो जीवस्य कर्मणः ।

सन्धोऽनानुगमात्कर्मसम्बन्धो यो ह्ययोरपि ॥—Ibid, vv 50 51

<sup>3</sup> Warren, op cit, p 5 "The natural perfections of the pure soul are sullied by the different kinds of Karma matter. Those who obscure right knowledge of details (Jñāna) are called Jñānāvaranīya, those which obscure right perception (Darśana), as in sleep, are called Darśanāvaranīya, those which obscure the bliss-nature of the soul and thus produce pleasure and pain are Vedanīya, and those which obscure the right attitude of the soul towards faith and right conduct, Mohanīya."—Dasgupta, op cit, i, pp 190-191. In addition to these four kinds of Karma there are other four kinds of Karma, which are called Āyush-Karma, Nāma-Karma, Gotra Karma and Antarāya Karma.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

With all these handicaps in the form of Karmas none need be disappointed about his own spiritual growth. Though the Karmas of man are determining him in various ways, yet there is in him infinite capacity or power for right action (Ananta-Vīrya), so that Karma can never subdue this freedom and capacity though this may be suppressed from time to time by the influence of Karma. The Jaina Sāstras say that by means of a strict religious life and austerities all these Karmas can be destroyed, and the soul can ultimately achieve its natural state in Moksha. That is why Dr Buhler says "The accusation that Nātaputta embraced fatalism must therefore be regarded as an invention and an outcome of sect hatred, as well as of the wish to throw discredit on their opponents." <sup>1</sup>

Thus the purging of the Karmas, or rather their destruction, is called Nirjarā, and the utter annihilation of all Karmas or the complete freedom of the soul from Karmic matter is called Moksha. <sup>2</sup> Thus Nirjarā is possible by a change in the soul, or by reaping the effects of Karmas, or by penances before their time of fruition. When all the Karmas are destroyed Moksha, or liberation, is effected. <sup>3</sup>

From the above characteristics of these different categories one thing is clear—that they are in one way or the other connected with the soul until it obtains the final release from corporeal sufferance by deification through a perfect disengagement from both good and evil. It is due to this that Jīva, deluded by the Karmic forces, experiences ignorance, misery and wretchedness in this world. Such a revolving of Jīva in this phenomenal world is called Samsāra, and to get free from this Samsāra, which is the result of the delusion of the soul, is to achieve Moksha, or final emancipation. It is nothing extraneous to be obtained by Jīva, but it is merely its getting off from the clutches of Karmic fetters and achieving its own natural state. <sup>4</sup>

They determine respectively the duration of life, the character of our individuality, the family or the nationality, and the inborn energy which hinders or obstructs the progress or success of the soul.

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, op cit, p. 32. (cf. Jacobi, I A, ix, pp. 159-160)

<sup>2</sup> 'ब्रह्मस्य कर्मणः' शांटी यस्तु सा निर्जेरा मत्ता । आत्मजिह्वो वियोगस्तु देहादेर्मोक्ष उच्यते ॥—Haribhadra, op cit, v. 52

<sup>3</sup> विपाकावयवस्य वा कर्मपरिश्रान्तो कर्मात्मसंयोगध्वंसः निर्जेरा, कृत्स्नकर्मक्षयलक्षणः मोक्षः — Umāsvātīvacaka, Tattvārthādhigama Sūtra (ed. Motilal Ladhaji), p. 7, n

<sup>4</sup> आत्मनः स्वभावसमवस्थानम् — Ibid. स्वभावज्ञ सीत्यम् — Hemacandra, Yoga-sūtra, Prakāśa or chap. xi, v. 61, p. 1, MS, B O R I L, No. 1815, of 1886-1892

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

In short, Moksha is a state in which the soul is quite free from all Karmic forces. Karmas are like clouds to it, and when it gets absolved from them the perfectly pure spirit shines with all its lustre, like the open sun, and this is its Moksha. In this process there is nothing like any one thing taking the place of the other, but merely the obstructive agent is done away with. So when a bird gets free from its cage, what is meant is not putting anything else in the place of the cage, but only removing the cage, which acted as an obstruction to the freedom of the bird. Similarly when the soul achieves Moksha it merely experiences what potentially is its own craving and nothing new, by the utter destruction of all forces—all Punya and Pāpa Karmas. Thus when Moksha is achieved the pure and free Ātmā gets to its own natural state, liberated from the material body and its veils—that is to say, the absolved soul shines with all its refulgence, bliss, knowledge and power.

Having thus understood the source of all conditions of weal and woe the question that arises now is how to attain Moksha. Jainism seems to show a way out of the misery of life by proposing austerity, inward and outward, as the means. The way to Nirvāṇa is naturally revealed by Jina. It lies through the Ratnatraya, or "the Three Jewels" of Samyag-Darśana (Right Belief), Samyag-Jñāna (Right Knowledge) and Samyak-Cāritra (Right Conduct).<sup>1</sup> Under a form at first sight perceptibly different we at once recognise here the Tri-Ratna of the Buddhists—viz. Buddha, the Law and the Samgha.<sup>2</sup>

The "Three Gems" which according to the Jainas result in the spirit's attainment of deliverance, form the fundamental basis of Jaina Yoga, which, says Hemacandra, is the cause of Moksha (Salvation).<sup>3</sup> The first of these tells us that faith in Jina or in the Tattvas propounded by him is right belief.<sup>4</sup> Its negative aspect is again scepticism of a kind which hampers all serious thought.

<sup>1</sup> सम्मय दर्शनज्ञानचारित्र्याणि मोक्षमार्गे —Umāsvātivācaka, op cit, chap 1, sūti 1 Cf Haribhadra, op cit v 58

<sup>2</sup> Barth, op cit, p 117 "It is interesting to compare these Three Jewels with the Buddhist Tri-Ratna—Buddha, the Law and the Order, and with the Mohammedan Triad—Happiness (Khera), Mercy (Mera), Prayer (Bandagi), and again with the Pārsi Trio—Holy Mind, Holy Speech and Holy Deeds"—Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 247

<sup>3</sup> चतुर्वर्गे चयसीमांश्चो योगस्तस्य च कारणम् ॥ ज्ञानप्रज्ञानचारित्र्यरूपं रत्नत्रयं च स —Hemacandra, op cit, chap 1, v 15, p 1

<sup>4</sup> तत्त्वाद्यैश्च ज्ञानं सम्मयदर्शनम् —Umāsvātivācaka, op cit, chap 1, sūti 2 The Tattvas referred to here are the Nava Tattvas mentioned above Haribhadra, op cit, p 58

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

All that Samyag-Darśana wants to achieve is that "instead of being blighted by cold logic and cunning sophistry, or eaten away by the corrosion of scepticism, it may grow into the tree of knowledge and fructify into the world-blessing fruit of righteous conduct"<sup>1</sup> Thus the most important of the Three Jewels is Samyag-Darśana, because it saves us from the soul-emptying, puzzling void of scepticism. On the other hand, right knowledge enables us to examine in detail all that the mind has inculcated through convictions. In short it gives a right and clear insight into the same "Tattvas". Right knowledge is in fact knowledge of the Jaina creed or of the doctrines as laid down by Jina.<sup>2</sup> Briefly, the intellect helped by faith finally helps to lead to right conduct, which is the goal.

There may be right Jñāna and Darsana, but if they are not accompanied by Cāritra all is useless. Right conduct consists in the strict observance of all the precepts laid down by Jina, through which Nirvana is attained. The goal being Moksha, naturally right conduct must be such as to keep the body down and lift the soul. Succinctly, it means giving up all sinful activities of the mind, speech and body.<sup>3</sup>

In practical life this practice of right conduct is divided into two broad divisions. Sādhu-Cāritra, or the conduct of a Sādhu, and Grhastha-Cāritra, or the conduct of a layman; but we shall not enter into all these details here. For our purpose, suffice it to say that naturally the rules for ascetics are stricter than those for laymen, and provide, as it were, a shorter, though harder, route to Nirvāna, which is the goal of the layman as well, but one which he reaches by a longer and slower process.

On the whole the rigour of Jaina discipline anticipates a great amount of strength of will and character before it can be easily taken up by anybody. Beginning with the five great vows of non-killing (Ahimsā), truth (Satya), non-stealing (Asteya), chastity

<sup>1</sup> Jaini, op cit, p. 54

तत्त्वानां ।
अवधारणस्तत्त्वानां सम्यग्ज्ञानं ॥

—Hemacandra, op cit, chap 1, v. 16, p. 1. The Jinas acknowledge five kinds of Jñāna, and mark with great precision the five degrees of knowledge that lead to Omniscience. (1) Mati Jñāna (sense knowledge), (2) Śruta Jñāna (testimony), (3) Āvadhi-Jñāna (knowledge of the remote), (4) Mana Paryāya Jñāna (thought reading), (5) Kevala Jñāna (Omniscience).

<sup>2</sup> अवधारणयोगानां ज्ञानाकारिण्युच्यते — Ibid, chap 1, v. 18, p. 2

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

(Brahmacarya) and non-attachment (Aparigraha),<sup>1</sup> and the three-fold restraint of the mind, speech and body, Jaina discipline goes to the final stage of a man's spiritual career when he desires neither life nor death, and when he may take up the vow of Anaśana, which in a stricter sense means "fasting which precedes and ends with death" <sup>2</sup>

The whole Jaina discipline has been so minutely and exhaustively worked out that it would make a study by itself <sup>3</sup> We shall merely state here in brief all that we have already said about the Jaina view of life and salvation, and then pass on to some other salient features of Jainism To sum up, in the words of Kundakundācārya

"The soul which is the agent of its own Karma, and the enjoyer of the fruits thereof, as conditioned by its own Karma, gets blinded by the veil of ignorance and roams about in the world of Samsāra, which is limited for the faithful and unlimited for the unfaithful

"Suppressing or annihilating the veil of ignorance which clouds the faculty of perception and will, well equipped with the Three Jewels, the undaunted pilgrim that has conquered the suffering and pain due to environment, beckoned by the ideal of self-knowledge wades through the paths and reaches the Divine city of Perfection" <sup>4</sup>

Thus when once the soul, overpowered with the four Kasāyas (passions)—anger, vanity, intrigue and greed—and the senses, and perforce kept away from its natural state by good and bad energies called Karmas, gets free from all such obstructive and foreign forces, it is said to enjoy all the attributes of God <sup>5</sup> "By the absence of Karma, Omniscient and embracing the whole world in its view, it attains undisturbable, supersensual and infinite bliss" <sup>6</sup> Really speaking such a soul puts forward the ideal of God in the

<sup>1</sup> अहिंसा सत्यमस्तेयब्रह्मचर्यापरिग्रहा । विमुक्तये ॥ —Hemacandra, op cit, chap i, v 19, p 2

<sup>2</sup> मरणाला य ज्ञानमया —Uttarādhyayana Sūtra, chap xxx, v 9

<sup>3</sup> "The value of Jaina philosophy lies not only in the fact that it, unlike Hinduism, has co related ethical teaching with its metaphysical system but also in the amazing knowledge of human nature which its ethics display"—Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 123

<sup>4</sup> Kundakundācārya, Pañcātīkāyasāra, S B J, iii, 75 76

<sup>5</sup> "In a word, believers in the creation theory make God a man, bring him down to the level of need and imperfection, whereas Jainism raises man to Godhood and inspires him to reach as near Godhood as possible by steady faith, right perfection, right knowledge, and above all, a spotless life"—Jaini, op cit, p 5

<sup>6</sup> Kundakundācārya, op cit, v 151 (trans Jaini, op cit, p 77)

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

that none else than the one who has rightly subdued all the good or bad forces that surround the soul can attain heights, and as a mark of their great victory all Tirthankaras are called Jinas, or Victors. "The soul which has perfect perception, perfect knowledge, infinite bliss and infinite power," says Yogendrācārya, "is a perfect saint, and being self-manifested, is known as Jina-Deva (or the divine conqueror)"<sup>1</sup> All these omniscient souls, after their span of life on this earth is over, reach final emancipation or Moksha<sup>2</sup> Thus Nirvāna or the final liberation of the Jainas is a state of being, without qualities and relation, and remote from all chances of rebirth. Like the Buddhists, it is not an escape into Nirvāna or nothingness<sup>3</sup> It is an escape from the body though not from existence. "It is not the fact of existence which is the evil in the eyes of the Jainas, it is life which is bad"<sup>4</sup> The body being separated from the soul, the animate being gains freedom from the trammels of the successive series of existences, and thus Nirvāna is not the annihilation of the soul but its entry into a state of blessedness which has no end. "(The liberated) is not long or small, not black nor blue, not bitter nor pungent, is without body, without resurrection, without contact (of matter), is not feminine nor masculine nor neuter, he perceives, he knows, but there is no analogy (whereby to know the nature of the liberated soul), its essence is without form, there is no condition of the unconditioned"<sup>5</sup>

Coming to some of the prominent features of Jainism, the first thing that would strike us most is the ideal of Ahimsā as propounded by it. Kundakundācārya states that "Jīva is conscious, formless, characterised by Upayoga, attached to Karma, the Lord, the agent, the enjoyer (of the fruits of Karma), the pervader of bodies (large or small), that which goes upward to the end of

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Jaini, op cit, p. 78

<sup>2</sup> As a matter of detail we may observe that the Digambara sect of the Jainas agrees with the Buddhists in maintaining that no woman has the capacity of attaining Nirvāna. To the Digambaras, before she can ever reach Moksha she has to undergo rebirth as a man, while to the Svetāmbaras the path of Moksha is open to all whether man or woman. अस्ति स्त्रीनिर्वाणं पुंवा (Like man there is Nirvāna for woman), says Śākatāyanācārya in his "स्त्रीमुक्ति-केवलमुक्तिप्रकरणमुपमन"—Cf. J S S, II, Nos. 34, Appendix 2, v. 2

<sup>3</sup> Buddhists seem to use their common word Nirvāna as connoting extinction not only of desire with which the Jainas would agree, but also of the soul itself, which they would indignantly deny.—Stevenson (Mrs.), op cit, p. 172

<sup>4</sup> Barth, op cit, p. 147

<sup>5</sup> Jacobi, S B E, XLII, p. 52

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

Loka, being free from the impurity of Karma"<sup>1</sup> Life to the Jainas is universally the same, and it is governed by the same immutable law of cause and effect. Not only is man endowed with Jīva, but also all creatures, including plants, animals, birds, insects, and even atomic and invisible beings, like the smallest particles of the elements of the earth, the fire, the water and the wind are endowed with the soul (Jīva). This hylozoistic theory, as Jacobi calls it, is an important characteristic of the Jainas, and "pervades their whole philosophic system and code of morals"<sup>2</sup> It is quite different from the animistic belief in the existence of spirits in stones, trees and running brooks<sup>3</sup> The latter had to be propitiated with bloody sacrifices, destroying other forms of precious life, but according to the Jainas life in all its forms is sacred, and as it moves towards the same goal it is not to be disturbed or disintegrated by any kind of violence. This is the rationale or psychology underlying perhaps by far the most dominating characteristic of Jainism—viz the principle of Ahimsā<sup>4</sup>

Ahimsā, as defined by Hemacandra, is as follows

न यत्प्रमादयोगेन जीवितव्य-रोपणम् ।

जसानीं स्यावराणां च तदहिंसाव्रतं मतम् ॥

"Not to destroy life, either five-, four-, three-, or two-sensed or immovable (i.e. one-sensed), even through carelessness is considered as keeping the vow of non-killing"<sup>5</sup>

The implications of this doctrine are perhaps nowhere better illustrated than in a story contained in Hemacandra's Yogaśāstra. It is related therein that in the days of King Śrenika there was a butcher named Kālasaukarika who was known for his cruelty. He had a son named Sulasa, who was a great devotee of Lord Mahāvīra, and hence on grounds of religion he was on good terms with Abhayakumāra, the son of the King Śrenika. This butcher's mentality was so wild and fierce that it had become more or less impossible to win him over to the Ahimsā of the Jainas. Śrenika being a staunch follower of Mahāvīra was very much worried at

<sup>1</sup> Kundakundācārya, S B I, iii, 27, cf. Dra. yasamgraha, S B J, i, pp. 6-7

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, op cit Int., p. xxxiii

<sup>3</sup> The animistic belief that nearly everything is possessed of a soul proves that Jainism is older than Mahāvīra and Buddha. This must have appeared at a very early time when higher forms of religious beliefs and cults had not yet, more generally, taken hold of the Indian mind. Cf. Jacobi, op cit xlv, Int. p. xxxiii

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Smith, Oxford History of India, p. 53

<sup>5</sup> Hemacandra, op cit, chap. v, 20 p. 2 (For trans. see Stevenson (Mrs.), op cit, p. 234)

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

this, and so being actuated with a high sense of duty he told the butcher

सुनां पिबुष्व यत् ।
दास्येऽहमर्थमर्थस्य लोभात्समि सौमिकः ॥

“ If you leave your profession, I shall bestow wealth on you, for it is through greed of wealth that you are a butcher ”

This request on the part of the king had no effect on Kāla-saukarika With all light-mindedness he replied

सुनायां ननु को दोषो यया जीवन्ति मानवाः ।
तो न मातुं स्वप्नान्ति ॥

“ What harm is there in butchery by which human beings subsist ? I am not going to leave it ”

Thus when the king saw that there was no way open to him he put him into a dark well, where he was left hanging the whole night, but even there the butcher's mentality led him to draw figures of animals on the wall of the well and destroy them then and there After this he caught some dangerous disease and went to hell

Just after the death of his father Sulasa's relatives gathered around him and tried to persuade him to continue the family profession, but he told them “ As life is dear to me so also is the case with other animals, and having seen such fruits who would be prepared to live by killing ? ” All this had little or no effect on Sulasa's relatives, and they even showed their readiness to share the fruits of his life Then Sulasa, pretending to kill a buffalo, gave a stroke with his father's axe on his leg and fell senseless on the ground After a short time he regained consciousness and addressed his relatives

बन्धवो यूयं विभज्य मम वेदनाम् । “ Relatives ! You (now) share my pain,” but they could do nothing more than merely console him Then he again told them, as if reminding them of their original promise

अयमियतीमपि । न मे ग्रहीतुमीशिध्मे तत्कथं नरकव्यथाम् ॥ “ If you cannot take this much misery how can you the miseries of hell ? ” Thus Sulasa won over his relatives to his way of thinking, and having taken the twelve vows of the Jainas went to heaven<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hemacandra, Yogaśāstra (with his own commentary), chap II, v 30, pp 91-95 Very often heaven is taken to mean Moksha, but it is not so To the Jainas Moksha is that stage from which the soul has never to return According to Jainism there is a limit to life in heaven, but when the soul reaches Moksha it enjoys bliss for ever

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

The moral of this story is obvious. It illustrates the extreme insistence of the Jainas on the principle of Ahimsā, no less than the theory of Karma. "Viler than unbelievers," says the Yogaśāstra, quoting the law of Manu to the effect that animals may be slain for sacrifice, "are those cruel ones who make the law that teaches killing" <sup>1</sup>

In their practical life also the respect of the Jainas for everything that has life is surprising, looking to the hurry and worry of this workaday world of ours. Whatever criticism we desire to offer about Jainism as it is in practice, there is no denying the fact that the great ideal of Ahimsā of the Jainas was actuated by feelings of love and friendship towards all beings, and hence for our purpose suffice it to make a mere statement of facts, and a few remarks based on them. To a Sādhu the rule of wounding nothing means that he must carry three articles with him—a straining-cloth for his drinking-water, a broom, and a veil before his mouth lest he might unconsciously swallow or crush any invisible animalcule. "This duty also necessitates the ascetic to pluck in the most painful manner his hair, which, according to the original custom, he must do away with at his consecration—a peculiar custom of the Jainas, which is not found among the other penitents of India" <sup>2</sup>

Even so, for fear of outraging the vow of Ahimsā, a layman also observes so many precautions in daily life, but something which is rather striking is not to eat and, if possible, not to drink after sunset, that he might not swallow insects through mistake, and hence says Hemacandra. "Who would take food at night when human beings because of their eyesight being obstructed by deep darkness cannot see the insects falling in the eatables?" <sup>3</sup> Looking to all these practices it is clear that "no Hindu sect has carried Ahimsā farther—i.e. respect for and abstinence from everything that has life" <sup>4</sup>

In spite of all this rigidity of practical details, there is nothing to warrant the conclusion that Jainism, literally obeyed, cannot hold the world together, but would lead nations to subjection, inaction and beggary. "It is only prejudice and garbled accounts of Jainism that have led to its being misunderstood. 'Do your duty. Do it as humanly as you can.' This, in brief, is the primary

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Hopkins op cit, p. 288

<sup>2</sup> Bulaki, op cit, p. 15

<sup>3</sup> Hemacandra op cit, MS, chap. III, v. 40, p. 8

<sup>4</sup> Burth, op cit, p. 145

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

precept of Jainism Not-killing cannot interfere with one's duties" <sup>1</sup> The Jaina Ahimsā is not the Ahimsā of a weakling but that of a brave soul which is or wants to be above all the evil forces of this world Hemacandra rightly based it on the maxim "Look upon other beings as you would look upon yourself" <sup>2</sup> An instance from the Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra amply illustrates the Jaina attitude towards the poorest, the lowliest and the lost.

Harikeśa was a Svapāka or Cāndāla He became a great sage, possessed of the highest virtues, with his senses wholly subdued Once when on his begging tours he approached the enclosure of a Brahmanical sacrifice, and observed

"O Brāhmanas, why do you tend the fire, and seek external purity by water? The clever ones say that external purity, which you seek for, is not the right thing

"You (use) Kusa-grass, sacrificial poles, straw and wood, you touch water in the evening and in the morning, thereby you injure living beings, and in your ignorance you commit sins again and again

"The law is my pond, celibacy my bathing-place, which is not turbid, and throughout clear for the soul, penance is my fireplace, right exertion is my sacrificial ladle, the body the dried cowdung, Karmaṇ is my fuel, self-control, right exertion and tranquillity are the oblations, praised by the sages, which I offer"

Small wonder then that the Uttarādhyayana proclaims "The value of penance has become visible, birth appears of no value! Look at the holy Harikeśa, the son of a Svapāka, whose power is so great" <sup>3</sup>

This illustration also serves to indicate some of the moral virtues sought to be inculcated by the early Jainas Really speaking, the characteristic feature of this religion is its claim to universality, and at its back is that great and glorious ideal of Ahimsā, which puts before its saviours not the ideal of a hermit striving to secure his own redemption, but the ideal of a monk enrolled in a brotherhood, and striving to save others "It declares its object to be to lead all men to salvation and to open its arms—not only to the noble Āryaṇ, but also to the low-

<sup>1</sup> Jumi, op cit, p 72

<sup>2</sup> आत्मवत् सर्वेष्वपि —Hemacandra op cit, chap. ii v 20 p 2

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, S B I xlv, pp 50-56

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

born Sūdra, and even to the alien, deeply despised in India, the Mlecha " <sup>1</sup>

Besides this cosmopolitan spirit of freely admitting any class of lay adherents into its fold, and thus to communion,<sup>2</sup> the feeling with which a Jaina is to look towards other faiths is itself creditable. It shows to what extent Jainism was careful not to injure the feelings of others. Even Mrs Stevenson has to say "One of the unique glories of Jainism is that it, unlike most Indian-born religions, believes in the possibility of aliens reaching its goal" <sup>3</sup> This catholic attitude of respect for others is a characteristic of some of the brightest luminaries of the Jaina church. Haribhadra begins his section on the Jainas in the Saddarśana Samuccaya with the words

पक्षपातो न मं वीर न द्वेषः कपिलादिषु ।
मुक्तिमद्वेषेण यस्य तस्य कार्यं परिग्रहः ॥

"Neither have I any partiality towards Vīra, nor do I hate Kapila and others. Whose word is proper his conclusion should be accepted" <sup>4</sup>

In addition to this greatly democratic constitution of the Jainas the ideal of Ahimsā has also nourished and given due prominence to the discipline of confession within the Jaina church. Himsā or injury to a certain extent is inevitable in human life, and hence a daily confession and a day-to-day consciousness of sins or wrongs committed during the course of the day is a necessity for the ultimate goal to be achieved. This may not be called the unique feature of Jainism, but in the Jaina church the prominence given to it is no doubt unique. Sāmāyika and Pratikramana, the two disciplines which have directly resulted from it, play a very <sup>1</sup> Buhler op cit, p. 3. "The Jaina community is only divided into Yatis and Śrāvakas, and if in any part of India, the Jainas practically recognise the distinctions of caste it is just the same with the Christians and Mahomedans of Southern India, and even with the Buddhists of Ceylon. This has nothing to do with the religion, it is only the adoption of social distinctions, which are rooted too deeply in the mind of the Indian nation to be abolished by the word of a religious reformer." Jacobi, Kalpa Sūtra, Int., p. 4.

<sup>2</sup> "Hsien Tsang's notes on the appearance of Nirgrantha or Digambara in Kapiśu (Béal Si Yuk), p. 55) point apparently to the fact that they had in the North West at least, spread their missionary activity beyond the borders of India."—Buhler, op cit, p. 4.

<sup>3</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p. 243.

<sup>4</sup> Haribhadra, op cit, p. 39, see also

भरबीजीकुरजनना रायाछा क्षयमुपायता यस्य ।

ब्रह्मा वा विष्णुर्यो, हरो जिनो वा नमस्तस्मै ॥

Hemacandra, Mahādevastotra v. 44

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

important part in the lives of both the clergy and the laity. The Āvaśyaka-Sūtra of Sudharma goes to the extent of saying "That is real knowledge which begins with Sāmāyika and ends with Bindusāra (the fourteenth Pūrva). The result of this is Right Conduct and the result of Cāritra is Nirvāna " <sup>1</sup>

The vow of Sāmāyika, by observing which one gets equanimity of the soul, lays it down that at least forty-eight minutes in a day must be given to meditation <sup>2</sup>. The most essential portion of which—Kāreṃ Bhante, etc., - may be translated thus

"O Lord! I do Sāmāyika. I renounce all sinful activities. Till I live, with mind, speech and body, neither will I do nor will I make others do them. For that (sin) O Lord! I revert from them, I condemn them in the presence of my spirit and preceptor, and I vow to keep my soul free from such actions " <sup>3</sup>

These were the very words uttered by Lord Mahāvīra just after he was consecrated as a Sādhu <sup>4</sup>. One of the definitions offered of Sāmāyika in the Āvaśyaka Sūtra commented upon by Haribhadra is roughly as follows

"He has rightly undergone the vow of Sāmāyika who has attained the attitude of equality, which makes him look at all kinds of living beings as he looks towards himself <sup>5</sup>. No kind of asceticism (Tapas) can be of any good so long as attachment and antipathy (Rāga and Dveṣha) do not leave the soul. It is only when a man learns to look upon all living beings with equality (Samatva) that he can effect such a conquest over Rāga and Dveṣha " <sup>6</sup>

Coming to Padikamanam or Sanskrit Pratikramana, we find herein a frank confession of sins and a sincere desire for their forgiveness. It is repentance for faults that already attach to the soul. "When engaging in Pratikramana—i.e. confession—Jainas think of the sins that they may have committed against any being possessing any Indriya and ask forgiveness. At this time they also think of any germs which they may have created by sinning

<sup>1</sup> सामाद्यमाईय ।

निष्ठाण ॥ — Āvaśyaka Sūtra, v. 93, p. 69

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p. 215

<sup>3</sup> करमि भन्त वासिरामि — Āvaśyaka Sūtra p. 154

<sup>4</sup> कृतपञ्चमोष्टिकलोच्चा भगवान् करमि सामाद्य् " उच्यते — Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tikā, p. 96 Cf. Āvaśyaka Sūtra p. 281

<sup>5</sup> य सम मध्यस्थ, आत्मानामि पर, 'सम्भूतेषु', तस्य सामायिकं भवति. — Āvaśyaka Sūtra p. 329

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Dasgupta, op cit, p. 201

MAHĀVIRA AND HIS TIMES

against the laws of sanitation etc.”<sup>1</sup> This is the natural outcome of a teaching that encourages civic and philanthropic virtues born out of the principle of Ahimsā, which in its active form means helping humanity in its struggle for emancipation. Moreover the social organisation of the Jāinas is so designed as to carry out in practice the ideals briefly indicated above.

We shall now pass on to a characteristic feature of Jaina philosophy which has been considered as the distinct contribution of the Jainas to Indian logic. It is common with all religions to insist upon and provide for perfect knowledge. Every religion tries to teach man to go beyond the phenomenon. Jainism does the same, but with this difference, that it does not recognise the real from a restricted point of view.

For this attainment of perfect knowledge Jainism has a philosophy of its own, and this is known as the doctrine of Syādvāda or Anekāntavāda of the Jainas. “The doctrine of Nayas or stand-points is a peculiar feature of the Jaina logic.”<sup>2</sup> We have already seen that the Jaina metaphysics starts with a dualistic division of the universe into Jīna and Ajīna, and that in them lies the Tripadī<sup>3</sup> of Utpāda, Vyaya and Dhruva, respectively meaning Origination, Destruction and Permanence. Here Origination means no new creation, because to the Jaina mind the whole universe of being has existed from all eternity. This Guna of Origination (Utpāda) is just to show that in a permanent universe—permanent meaning having no origin—there is always origination of its modes of manifestations.<sup>4</sup> Thus everything that is Sat, or the conception of being to the Jaina mind, is neither the absolutely unchangeable, nor the momentary changing qualities or existences, but involves them both. “Being then, as is testified by experience, is that which involves a permanent unit, which is incessantly every moment losing some qualities and gaining new ones.”<sup>5</sup> This is, in short, the theory of Indefiniteness (Anekāntavāda),<sup>6</sup> or “what we may

<sup>1</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), op cit p. 101

<sup>2</sup> Radhakrishnan, op cit, I, p. 298

<sup>3</sup> वस्तुतत्त्वं योत्पादव्यययोश्चात्मकम् —Hemacandra, Syādvādamāñjarī, p. 168 Cf. ibid, v, 21, 22

येनोत्पादव्यययोश्चात्मकं यत्सत्तद्विद्यते ।

अनन्तधर्मकं वस्तु त्रेनोक्तं मानगोचरः ॥

—Haribhadra, op cit, v. 57

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Warren, op cit, pp. 22, 23

<sup>5</sup> Dasgupta, op cit, I, p. 175

<sup>6</sup> तत्त्वं योत्पादव्यययोश्चात्मकम् —Hemacandra, op cit, p. 170

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

call the relative pluralism of the Jainas as against the extreme absolutism of the Upanishads and pluralism of the Buddhists”<sup>1</sup> It is on this that the Syādvāda dialectics of the Jainas are based “On these premises it is obvious that concerning a given Padārtha we can make from a divergent point of view, different, apparently contradictory, statements”<sup>2</sup>

The innumerable qualities of a thing cannot be predicated in one statement, but they are all implied by any statement which predicates one of the qualities of a thing Everything has to be considered in four different aspects the matter (Dravya), space (Kshetra), time (Kāla), and nature (Bhāva) This is why “the doctrine of Syādvāda holds that since the most contrary characteristics of infinite variety may be associated with a thing, affirmation, made from whatever standpoint (Naya), cannot be regarded as absolute”<sup>3</sup> Thus to observe a thing in its various aspects from different points of view is what is meant by Syādvāda “It is the method of knowing or speaking of a thing synthetically”<sup>4</sup>

Very often Syādvāda has been described as the doctrine of scepticism,<sup>5</sup> but it is more correct to call it the science of “the assertion of alternative possibilities”<sup>6</sup> “The Syādvāda doctrine,” says A. B. Dhruva, “is not a doctrine of doubt It enables a man to look at things with a wide and liberal view It teaches us how and in what manner to look at things of this universe”<sup>7</sup> It neither affirms nor denies the existence of a thing,<sup>8</sup> but only states that a thing is or is not, or is what is described to be from one out of several points of view with which reality might be comprehended “The dynamic character of reality consists only with relative or conditional predication It does not deny the possibility of predication

<sup>1</sup> Dasgupta, op cit, i p 175, नेकानि मानानि अनेकमान इति — Īśvarāśāskyaka bhāṣyam v 2186, p 895

<sup>2</sup> Belvalkar op cit p 112

<sup>3</sup> Warren op cit p 70

<sup>4</sup> Dasgupta, op cit, p 179

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Hultsch, J I vii, p 113 “In contrast to the Nihilistic Buddhist, the Jaina assumes a doubtful attitude, so that he is termed the ‘may be philosopher,’ Syādvāda in opposition to the Buddhist, the philosopher of ‘the void’” — Hopkins, op cit p 291

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Flett J I, vii p 107 The view is called Syādvāda, since it holds all knowledge to be only probable Every position gives us only a perhaps, a maybe, or a Syat We cannot confirm or deny anything absolutely of any object There is nothing certain on account of the endless complexity of things — Radhakrishnan, op cit i p 302

<sup>7</sup> Kannoodal Saptabhaṅga Naya, Int., p 8

<sup>8</sup> उवाचिन्मपहितं विरुद्धं

नापेक्षस्य सन्दर्भात् ॥

—Hemacandra, op cit, v 24, p 104

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

Every proposition is true, but only under certain conditions—i.e. hypothetically. There is nothing certain on account of the endless complexity of things. It is the use in seven different ways of judgment which affirm and negate, severally and jointly, without self-contradiction, thus discriminating the several qualities”<sup>1</sup> Answering the seven questions from the seven points of view is called Saptabhāṅgi-Naya, or Pluralistic arguments. This philosophical doctrine is very abstruse and recondite. It is highly technical, and we cannot do better than produce the following exposition of it.

“The great contention of the Advaitins was that there is only one really existing entity, the Ātman, the-One-only without-a-second (Ekamevādaitīyam), and that this is permanent (Nitya), all else being non-existent (āsat), a mere illusion. Hence it was called the Ātma-vāda, Eka-vāda or Nitya-vāda. Their stock argument was that just as there are no such entities as cup, jar, etc.—these being only clay under various names and shapes—so all the phenomena of the universe are only various manifestations of the sole entity, Ātman. The Buddhists on the other hand said that man had no real knowledge of any such permanent entity. It was pure speculation, man’s knowledge being confined to changing phenomena—growth, decay and death. Their doctrine was therefore called Anitya-vāda. Clay as a substance may be permanent, but as a jar it is impermanent—may come into existence and perish. In other words, being is not simple, as Advaitins assert, but complex, and any statement about it is only part of the truth. The various possibilities were classed under seven heads (Sapta-bhāṅgi), each beginning with the word Syāt, which is combined with one or more of these terms Asti (‘is’), Nāsti (‘is not’), and Avaktavya (‘cannot be expressed’). Thus you can affirm existence of a thing from one point of view (Syāt-asti), deny it from another (Syāt-nāsti), and affirm both existence and non-existence with reference to it at different times (Syāt-asti-nāsti). If you should think of affirming both existence and non-existence at the same time from the same point of view, you must say that the thing cannot be spoken of (Syāt-avaktavyah). Similarly, under certain circumstances the affirmation of existence is not possible (Syāt-asti-avaktavyah), and also both (Syāt-asti-nāsti-avaktavyah). What our opinion the earliest mention of the Seven-Nayas and of the Syādvāda philosophy of the Jainas lies in the Sthānāṅga, the Bhagavati and the other canonical books of the Jainas<sup>1</sup>. Finally, to quote Lala Kannoomal "The philosophers teaching this doctrine have written voluminous works to explain and expound its truth, to explain its subtleties. If this method of thinking is adopted in looking at the various religious tenets and philosophical creeds prevailing in India, which appear to be mutually conflicting, occasioning considerable differences of opinions, a perceptible change towards the reconciliation might occur"<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Radhakrishnan op cit, p. 302, स्याद्वाच्ये हि नापेक्षलक्ष्यैकस्मिन् सदस्य-
निर्वाचनान्वाक्येकधर्माभ्युपगम । - Viṣayadharma-sūtri, op cit, p. 151

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

If Ahimsā may be generalised as the fundamental ethical virtue of Jainism,<sup>3</sup> Syādvāda may be described as the central and unique feature of Jaina metaphysics, and the explicit denial of the possibility of a perfect being from all eternity with the message of "Man ! thou art thine own friend," as the centre round which circles the Jaina ritual. All this combined with the ideal of Ahimsā teaches

He prayeth well, who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast,
He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small,
(COLERIDGE)

and that is why a Jaina always says

सामेहि सङ्गतीये, सङ्गे जीवा समंतु मे ।
मेही मे सङ्गभृशु, वेरं मरुत् न केळइ ॥

"I forgive all souls, let all souls forgive me. I am on friendly terms with all, I have no enmity with anybody"<sup>4</sup>.

Now to misunderstand or to misinterpret any of these features is to deliberately judge in a wrong way what is properly called Jainism. Let us be candid then, and concede that Mahāvīra's ideals were lofty and holy, and that his message of equality of mankind and of all living beings proclaimed to the caste-stricken and Yagna-ridden people of India was large-hearted and benevolent

<sup>1</sup> Sthānāṅga (Āgamodaya Samiti), p. 390, sūtra 552, Bhagavati (Āgamodaya Samiti), sūtra 469, p. 592. For further references see Sukhlal and Becherdas, Sammatitarka of Siddhasena, III, p. 441, n. 10.

<sup>2</sup> Kannoomal, op cit, Int., p. 7.

<sup>3</sup> Dasgupta, op cit, p. 200.

<sup>4</sup> Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p. 763.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

IV

With these few words about the reformed church of Mahāvīra we shall now very briefly deal with some of the most important schisms in the Jama church. And we shall in conclusion place a few considerations before the reader as to how the Jama community could manage to survive all these insurrections in the Samgha of Lord Mahāvīra.

As usual with the life of all prophets and reformers unfortunately the church of Mahāvīra had also to face in its own days and afterwards a group of heterodox teachers, including those that are known to the Jainas as the seven Ninhagas—Sanskrit Ninhavas<sup>1</sup>—meaning those who propound something else than what the Jina has meant. The seven Ninhavas are Jamālī, Tisagutta, Āsādha, Asvāmīti, Gauga, Chahue, and Goshtāmāhila.<sup>2</sup> Of these the most prominent and also the most dangerous rival of Mahāvīra was Gosāla Mankhalputta—who is evidently identical with Mankhal Gosālo mentioned in the Pāli Sūthas as one of the “six heretical teachers” and opponents of Lord Buddha.<sup>3</sup> Little is known about him and about the sect of the Ājīvikas of which he was the founder. We are practically in the dark “regarding the doctrines and practices of that ascetic community, which would seem to have, at one time, rivalled in numbers and importance the two still existing great communities of the Buddhists and Jainas.”<sup>4</sup> After Gosāla we may just mention Jamālī, the son-in-law of Mahāvīra, Tisagutta, a holy man in the community, and others.<sup>5</sup>

Gosāla first met Mahāvīra at Rājagṛha, and there he at once became his disciple. He was called Gosāla because he was born in a cowshed.<sup>6</sup> His father was a mendicant friar, and all these

<sup>1</sup> बहुरय । सत्रेण विपणहया बहुलावाप्स -- Āśasyaka Sūtra, v, 778, p. 311, लघु समनिहवसहये लिख्यते — Merutunga, Vicārasreni, J S S, II, Nos. 3-4, Appendix, pp. 11-12.

<sup>2</sup> Bhagavati Sūtra (Āgamodaya Samiti) II, pp. 410-430.

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, Kalpa Sūtra, Int. p. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Hocink, Udasaga Dasao II, Int. p. 211. Cf. Buhler, JA, XX, p. 362.

<sup>5</sup> In the fourteenth year of Mahāvīra's office as a prophet his nephew and son-in-law Jamālī headed an opposition against him, and similarly, two years afterwards, a holy man in the community named Tisagutta made an attack. Both these merely concerned trifles. Jamālī however, persisted in his heretical opinions till his death. — Charpentier, CHI, p. 163.

<sup>6</sup> Kalpa Sūtra Subodhikā Tīkā, p. 102. Gosāla, son of a professional mendicant, Mankhalī and his wife Bhaddā. He saw the light of day in the cowshed of the wealthy Brahmana Gobahula at Sāvattihī. — Sastrī (Banerji), JBORS, XX, p. 55.

MAHĀVIRA AND HIS TIMES

circumstances combined to show the humble origin of the founder of the community of religious mendicants called the Ājīvikas<sup>1</sup> "In the seventh Anga . a man, Saddala-putta, is said to have been received by Gośāla into the Ājīvika community, and the Bhagavati-Sūtra, the fifth Anga, gives us an account of the life of Gośāla as the acknowledged head of the community Though the Buddhist scriptures also frequently mention Gośāla Mankhaliputta as one of the leaders of the six religious mendicant communities whom Buddha singles out for special animadversion, they never explicitly connect him with the Ājīvikas, or state that he was their leader But that on this point the Buddhist tradition did not really differ from the Jaina is shown by the fact that both attribute to him the holding of the religio-philosophical doctrine of the negation of the free-will and moral responsibility."<sup>2</sup>

We have already seen that the period under consideration—when the religious life of ancient India was undergoing such radical change—is the rationalistic age of our history It is the formative period which produced great individual philosophers like Gośāla Mankhaliputta, Sañjaya Belāttaputta, and others Really speaking, India was then passing through a period of such religious enthusiasm that "we must emphasise the fact that philosophy in this period not only ceased to be a purely academic or ritualistic affair divorced from life and conduct, it developed strong and eccentric personalities and introduced all manner of strange practices and penances It must be put to the credit of these 'heretic' free-thinkers that they brought philosophy into the open and compelled it to concern itself with the daily life and conduct of the people Thus of the sect of the Ājīvikas to which Mankhaliputta Gośāla belonged we read—"They discard all clothing, they dispense with all decent habits, they lick their food out of their hands They will not eat fish or flesh nor drink liquor or gruel Some of them beg at one house and accept but one handful of food, others at two or seven Some take food only once a day, others once in two days, others once in seven days, others once in every half-month' And this was by no means an isolated or exceptional case It would seem as if a sort of premium was set upon boldness and

<sup>1</sup> The name "Ājīvikas," it appears, was originally meant to stigmatise Gośāla and his followers as "professionals," though no doubt in later times, when it became the distinctive name of a mendicant order, it has no longer that offensive meaning —Hoernle, ERE, i, p 259

<sup>2</sup> Ibid

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

originality of conception and independence and eccentricity of practice" <sup>1</sup>

Thus it is clear that in Gosāla Mahāvīra had one who was not only not an asset or a source of strength to his Samgha, but had one who acted as a great obstruction to the progress of the Jaina church in the early days of its reformation and this comparatively strengthened the position of the Buddhists, and gave a severe blow to the rising influence of Mahāvīra <sup>2</sup> So the consequences of this meeting of Mahāvīra and Gosāla were certainly disastrous for both the teacher and the disciple "The two men were so different in character and temper that after six years, owing to the insincerity and trickery of Gosāla the companionship was dissolved" <sup>3</sup>

Having separated from his master Gosāla made his headquarters in the house of a potter-woman at Srāvastī and seems to have gained considerable influence there <sup>4</sup> Soon after his separation from Mahāvīra he proclaimed that he had attained to the highest stage of saintship, that of a Jina "This claim was put forth two years before Mahāvīra himself had reached his perfect enlightenment" <sup>5</sup> But according to the Jaina tradition it is only in the fourteenth year of his career as a prophet that Mahāvīra happened to visit Srāvastī and there for the first time he seems to have seen Gosāla in the last days of his life It is also recorded that the dual and unsteady nature of Gosāla asserted itself, and later on he seems to have repented <sup>6</sup> his undesirable conduct against his master <sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Belyuker and Ranade History of Indian Philosophy II pp 460 461

<sup>2</sup> "The bone of contention was a theory of re-animation which Gosāla formulated from his observation of periodical re-animation of plant life, and generalised it to such an extent as to apply it indiscriminately to all forms of life. Barna, IDE II p 8 Cf also Sastri (Banerji) op cit p 56

<sup>3</sup> Hoernle op cit p 279 "Gosāla having learnt from him the possession of the Tejashī or power of erecting flame and having learnt from certain of the disciples of Pārśvanātha what is technically called the Mahānimitta of the eight Angas, intending probably their scriptural doctrines set up for himself as a Jina and quitted his master" - Wilson op cit I pp 295 296

<sup>4</sup> स्वामिनः पाश्चात्स्मिकेति आरब्ध्वा तत्रोपनिमग्नमातापयति — Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 214

<sup>5</sup> Charpentier CII I p 159

<sup>6</sup> Some Jains believe that because he so sincerely repented before his death, he went not to hell, but to one of the Detalokas - i.e. heavens — Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 60

<sup>7</sup> Cf ibid His last act was to acknowledge to his disciple the truth of Mahāvīra's statement respecting himself and to instruct them to bury him with every mark of dishonour and publicly to proclaim his shame — Hoernle, op cit, p 280

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

With all this there is one point which need not be overlooked. The relationship between Mahāvīra and Gośāla, or, in other words, the relative position of Mankhaliputta in the great wave of religious enthusiasm in India, needs some definite explanation. Dr Barua seems to be under some delusion when he says "Suffice it to say, that the evidences from either the Jaina or the Buddhist sources of information, do not bear out the Jaina pious belief that Gośāla was one of the two false disciples of Mahāvīra, and tend rather to prove the contrary. I mean that if the historian be called upon to pronounce a definite opinion on this disputed question he cannot but say that indebtedness, if any, was more on the side of the teacher than on that one who is branded by the Jaina as a false disciple" <sup>1</sup>

The delusion under which the learned scholar is labouring is that Mahāvīra first belonged to the religious order of Pārśvanātha, and that after one year, when he became undressed he joined the Ājīvikas <sup>2</sup>. This is a hypothesis which not only disregards the authentic Jaina sources and traditions, but it shows an utter ignorance as to why the very followers of Gośāla were called Ājīvikas. As seen above, the distinction between the Dharma of Pārśva and the Dharma of Mahāvīra was a deliberate move on the part of the latter, and that the term Ājīvika was a term of contempt which was used by the Jainas and others to show the real nature of the Ājīvika sect <sup>3</sup>. Thus it is impossible that Mahāvīra should have joined the order of the Ājīvikas, neither was there a sect like this existing before Gośāla openly revolted against his teacher, since Gośāla himself was the originator of it.

It is an open fact that what little we know about Gośāla and his followers is based on either the Buddhist or the Jaina annals. "Their statement must, of course, be accepted with some caution, but their general trustworthiness is guaranteed by their agreement in all essential facts. This agreement possesses all the more value as the statements come from two independent sources of information" <sup>4</sup>. A few isolated fragments which we can thus gather are, really speaking, not material which can entitle us to say that "indebtedness, if any, was more on the side of the teacher than

<sup>1</sup> Barua, op cit, pp 17-18

<sup>2</sup> Cf ibid

<sup>3</sup> "It is clear that in the mouth of the Buddhists, 'Ājīvika' was the term of reproach applicable to a Maskarin or Ka dandin of the baser sort"—Hoernle, op cit, p. 260

<sup>4</sup> Ibid p. 201

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

on that one who is branded by the Jainas as a false-disciple " This becomes especially so when we know that the very traditions with the help of which we come to such a sweeping conclusion say something contrary to it

The first point that the reputed doctor would like the critic to consider before judging one way or the other is " that the priority of Gośāla regarding Jinahood before Mahāvīra can be established beyond doubt by the history of Mankhaliputta in the Bhagavatī, confirmed in some important respects by the history of Mahāvīra in the Kalpa-Sūtra " <sup>1</sup>

We wish this point had not been put for the consideration of the critic. It seems as if the writer wants to raise a deliberate misunderstanding about the whole episode. Nowhere in the Sūtras, nor anywhere else in the whole of Jaina literature, is Gośāla said to have attained Jinahood. What is said, as just remarked, is that Gośāla became a self-styled Jina or Tīrthankara <sup>2</sup> " Buddha charged him with incontinency " <sup>3</sup> So also did Mahāvīra. He is equally emphatic about it. In a dialogue in the Sūtrakṛtāṅga between Ādraka, a disciple of Mahāvīra, and Gośāla the latter is reported to have said " According to our law an ascetic commits no sin has intercourse with women " <sup>4</sup> He charges his followers with being " the slaves of women," and says that " they do not lead a life of chastity " <sup>5</sup> How could such a person who had become so notorious with his antinomian doctrines be expected and be said to have attained Jinahood? This sounds particularly strange when furthermore, the fact of his becoming a Jina is based on the authority of the Jaina canon itself.

At another place the writer refers to the six previous births of Gośāla, with their particular periods as laid down in the Bhagavatī-Sūtra and concludes " The Bhagavatī account of the past reanimations of Gośāla, quaint and fanciful though it is, enables the historian to carry back the history of the Ājīvikas for 117 years counted backwards from Gośāla " <sup>6</sup> It seems that the popular tradition of the twenty-seven previous births of Mahāvīra has

<sup>1</sup> Barua, op cit p. 18

<sup>2</sup> सज्जिणे निराप्यलारी      सकेरली केवलप्यलारी      विहरइ — Bhagavatī Sūtra (Āgama day 1 Samiti) xv p. 679 (cf. Lasya Sūtra p. 214 Charpentier, op cit, p. 159)

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Horrocks, op cit p. 261

<sup>4</sup> Jacoby, S B I xlv, p. 411

<sup>5</sup> Ibid pp. 245-270 Vijaya Rājendra Sūri, Abhidhānārājendra, ii, p. 103

<sup>6</sup> Barua, op cit p. 7

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

been set aside here. One does not know what entitles the writer to come to something like "the pre-Makkhali history of the Ājīvikas" <sup>1</sup>

In this fashion Dr Barua has put forward a few more points for the consideration of the critics, but everywhere, as he has himself said, his has been "a tremendous effort of imagination" <sup>2</sup>. To go through, step by step, all the reasonings that he has put forward for maintaining his hypothesis based on his "intellectual sympathy" <sup>3</sup> towards the Ājīvikas would practically mean writing a small thesis on Gośāla. We need only say this much, that the learned doctor has mostly tried to disprove the Jaina and the Buddhist traditions with their own help. Moreover these are the traditions "which," observes Dr Jacobi, "in the absence of documents deserve most careful attention" <sup>4</sup>.

With all this it may be granted that "Gośāla's philosophy was not entirely a new growth in the country" <sup>5</sup>. It is certain that in the close environment of several conflicting theories and mutually contradictory dogmas what little Mahāvīra could achieve for the Jaina church was no doubt interconnected in the organic development of Indian thought <sup>6</sup>. Moreover, as observed by Dr Jacobi, it can also be said within its own limitations that "the greatest influence on the development of Mahāvīra's doctrine must be ascribed to Gośāla, the son of Mankhali" <sup>7</sup>. This is because both the theoretical and practical life of Gośāla probably had an abiding effect on the mind of Mahāvīra. To repeat Gośāla was theoretically a fatalist. He believed that "there is no such thing as exertion or labour or power or vigour or manly strength, but all things are unalterably fixed" <sup>8</sup>. While in his practical life he was "living in incontinency" (Abrahma-cary-vāsa) <sup>9</sup>. Thus naturally "the sin and shame of his life emphasised the need for stringent rules for the order, and the doctrine of absolute fatalism was to result in non-moral conduct. Jainism avoids this

<sup>1</sup> Barua, op cit p 7

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p 22

<sup>3</sup> Ibid

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, op cit Int, p xxiii

<sup>5</sup> Barua, op cit, p 27

<sup>6</sup> "While Sañjaya's dialectics was mainly negative, Gośāla, by his 'Terasiya,' or three-membered dialectics of 'it may be,' 'it may not be,' 'it may both be and not be,' had already paved the way for Mahāvīra's seven membered Syādvāda."—Belvalkar and Ranade, op cit, pp 456-457. Cf Hoernle, op cit, p 262

<sup>7</sup> Jacobi, op cit, Int, p xxix

<sup>8</sup> Hoernle, Uśi-ga-Dasāu, i, pp 97, 115-116. Cf ibid, ii, pp 109-110, 132

<sup>9</sup> Mayjhima Nikāya, i, 514 ff. Cf Hoernle, ERF, i, p 261

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

determinism by teaching that, though Karma decides all, we ourselves can affect our past Karma by our present life”<sup>1</sup>

Thus if at all Gosāla had an influence on the formulation of the reformed Jain doctrine, and on the career of Mahāvīra, it is only thus far and no further. In addition to this we may add once again that just because of these unhappy schisms in the Jain church “Mahāvīra’s chances of founding an all-India religious movement were seriously jeopardised”<sup>2</sup>

This much about Gosāla himself. We have already seen that in the fourteenth year of Mahāvīra’s life as a prophet Gosāla died. This event naturally coincides with the fact that he died 16 years prior to Mahāvīra, deducting 14 years from 30 of Mahāvīra as a prophet. Thus based on the date of Mahāvīra’s Nirvāṇa, which we have taken as approximately between 480-467 B.C. Gosāla’s death must be placed somewhere between 496-483 B.C. As laid down in the Bhagavati-Sūtra, this date of Gosāla is supported also by the fact that his death was coincident with the great war between King Kūmya (Ajātasatru) and King Cēdaga of Varsālī for the possession of an extraordinary elephant<sup>3</sup>. This elephant was given by Kūmya’s father, King Bimbisāra, to his younger son Vchalla by his wife Cellanā, a daughter of King Cēdaga. Having usurped the throne, Ajātasatru tried to get the elephant from his younger brother, but the latter ran away with it to his grandfather in Varsālī. “Kūmya having failed peacefully to obtain the extradition of the fugitive commenced war with Cēdaga”<sup>4</sup>. Thus the war which must have taken place somewhere about the time when Kūmya took upon himself the regal power, can be placed c. 496 B.C.

<sup>1</sup> Stevenson (Mrs) op. cit. p. 60. It was probably owing to Gosāla’s conduct that Mahāvīra added a vow of chastity to the four vows of Pārśvanātha’s order. — Ibid. p. 59. Cf. also ibid. p. 185. Hoernle op. cit. p. 264.

<sup>2</sup> Sistr (Bancroft) op. cit. p. 56. From the 6th to the 3rd century B.C. Buddhism under a common leader spread all over India and beyond. Divided counsel crippled Jainism at the start. But the Jains have the satisfaction of knowing that the once powerful Āryakas survive only as a memory. Ibid. p. 58.

<sup>3</sup> Hoernle Ucāsaga Dāsān Appendix I p. 7. एगहस्सिणादि मा यम् कृणिए राया परानिगिन्नए Bhagavati (Ugandevī) Sūtra p. 116 sūtr. 300. Cf. Hemacandra, Triśaṣṭi Śalākā, Pāra X. xv. 205-206.

<sup>4</sup> Hoernle op. cit. and loc. cit. Cf. also Lawney, Kāthākosa, pp. 178-179. न दद्यात्तपः पुद्गलं भवानि Ucāsaga Sūtra p. 684.

Dr Hoernle taking 483 B.C. as the date of Mahāvīra’s death, puts c. 500 B.C. as the date (approximate) of Gosāla and of the war between Ajātasatru and his grandfather. Cf. Hoernle, P.R.I. i. p. 261.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

Approaching the Ājīvika sect of the Jainas from an historical point of view we find that the sect did not die with its leader. Looking to the relation of the Ājīvikas with the Buddhists we see that the latter have "no cause for special resentment against either an Ājīvika or a Jaina. Buddhist rulers like Aśoka and Daśartha bestow cave-dwellings on the Ājīvikas at Barābar and Nāgārjunī Hills in the same spirit as they build Stūpas for the Buddhists or order alms to the Brahmans, elsewhere. The later resentment of the Buddhists centred round not the Jaina or the Ājīvika but the Brahman" <sup>1</sup>

The earliest mention of the Ājīvikas occurs in a brief record of the thirteenth year of Aśoka—that is to say, in 257 B C <sup>2</sup>—incised on the walls of two rock-hewn caves on Barābar Hill, near Gaya. It runs as follows: "King Piyadasi, in the 13th year of his reign, bestowed this cave on the Ājīvikas" <sup>3</sup>

The next mention occurs in the celebrated Pillar Edicts of Aśoka, where, referring to the functions of his censors of the Law of Piety, the emperor has included the Ājīvikas as one of those who will be looked after by them <sup>4</sup>. "Again, in the twentieth 'regnal year,' 250 B C, the sovereign presented a third costly rock-dwelling to the Ājīvikas" <sup>5</sup>. A further early mention occurs in a brief record, incised on the walls of three rock-hewn caves on Nāgārjunī Hill in the first year of the reign of Aśoka's successor Daśaratha—in c. 230 B C. It runs as follows: "This cave was bestowed by His Majesty Daśaratha, immediately after his accession, on the venerable Ājīvikas, to be a dwelling-place for them, as long as sun and moon endure" <sup>6</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Sastri (Banerji), op cit, p. 55

<sup>2</sup> Taking Aśoka's coronation as about 270-269 B C. Cf. Smith, Aśoka, p. 73 (3rd ed.), Mookerji (Radhakumud), Aśoka, p. 37

<sup>3</sup> Hoernle, op cit, p. 266. Cf. IA, xx, pp. 361 ff., Smith, Aśoka, p. 144 (1st ed.). Aśoka seems to have inherited his partiality towards the Ājīvikas from his parents, "if we may believe in the legends. The Mahāvamsaśikā (p. 126), as has been already noticed, refers to the family-preceptor of his mother, Queen Dharmā, being an Ājīvika of the name of Janasāna (deviyā kulūpago Janasāno nāma eko Ājīvika), whom King Bindusāra summoned to interpret the meaning of the Queen's dream before the birth of Aśoka, while in the Divyāvadāna (chap. xxvi), Bindusāra himself summons the Ājīvika ascetic Pingalavatsa for the examination of all his sons to find out who was the best to be his successor on the throne"—Mookerji (Radhakumud), op cit, pp. 64-65.

"The Ājīvika saint Pingalavatsa, summoned by the King, judged Aśoka as the fittest of his sons for the throne"—Ibid, p. 8.

<sup>4</sup> Smith, op cit, p. 155, E I, ii, pp. 270, 272, 274.

<sup>5</sup> Smith, op cit, p. 54 (3rd ed.).

<sup>6</sup> Hoernle, op cit, p. 266. Cf. IA, xx, pp. 361 ff., Smith, op cit, p. 145 (1st ed.).

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Thus "of the seven caves, two in the Barābar Hill and three in the Nāgārjunī Hill mention the grant of those caves to the 'Ājīvikas' (Ājīvikheḥi). In three cases the word Ājīvikheḥi had been deliberately chiselled off, every other letter entirely untouched"<sup>1</sup> It is really difficult to say who could have done this, but we know for certain that after King Daśaratha the Barābar Hills passed into the hands of the Jaina king, Khāravela. He was at Gorathagiri in the eighth year of his reign—i.e. just after the Aśoka-Daśaratha time. On epigraphic grounds also this can be ascertained by the remarkable façade of the Lomaśa R<sub>51</sub> Cave.<sup>2</sup> As a pious Jaina, Khāravela might have "attempted to wipe off old scores by obliterating the hated name of the impostor Gośāla's Ājīvika followers"<sup>3</sup>

Writing on this Jaina-Ājīvika hostility in the domain of archaeology Mr Mookerji observes "The last two Aśokan inscriptions in the Barābar caves, as shown here, and the three Nāgārjunī inscriptions of Daśaratha mention in common the grant of these caves to the Ājīvikas, but in three of these inscriptions there is detected an attempt to chisel away the word 'Ājīvikheḥi,' as if the name of this sect was not tolerated by somebody who was at such pains to wipe it off. Now, who was this somebody? Hultzsch conjectures it might have been the Mankhari Anantavarman, who assigned one of the Barābar caves to Kṛṣṇa, and two of the Nāgārjunī caves to Śiva and Pārvatī, and whose orthodox Hindu leaning did not favour the Ājīvikas. Dr Banerji Sastri puts forward a more convincing conjecture. He fastens the mischief on Khāravela, a Jaina, with the traditional hostility of his community to the Ājīvikas, a mischief that was thus committed much earlier than the times of Mankhari, when the Aśokan Brāhmī-Lipi was well-nigh forgotten"<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Sastri (Banerji), op cit p. 59

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p. 60. Cf. also "A comparison of the two sites leaves hardly a doubt that the Gorathagiri façade and inscription are intimately connected with the Udayagiri (Khāravela) inscriptions and façades, both done by a Jaina who signed his creed in the mutilation of the letters 'Ājīvikheḥi'"—Ibid, p. 61

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p. 60. "He (Khāravela) naturally turned out the Ājīvikas (chiselled off their names and put in his Kalingan troops in the Barābar Caves. The unfinished Lomaśa R<sub>51</sub> he must have found quite handy. In any case Khāravela seems to have employed Post-Mauryan craftsmen to polish up the walls"—Sastri (Banerji), J B O R S, vol. 1, p. 310

<sup>4</sup> Mookerji (Radhakumud), op cit p. 206. "Hultzsch's view is untenable. (1) He assumes without assigning any reason that Anantavarman in the 6th-7th century A.D. was familiar with Aśoka Brāhmī of the 3rd century B.C.—Sastri (Banerji) op cit, p. 57. The second reason put forward by the learned scholar is that Anantavarman himself being

LOMAŚA RSI CAVI BARABAR HILL.

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

Thus as a sect the Ājīvikas practically disappeared from India by the end of the second century B.C.,<sup>1</sup> though we find some such reference to it in the literature of the later period, as in Varāhamihira, Śīlānka's commentary on Sūtrakṛtāṅga, Halāyudha's Abhidhāna-Ratnamālā, and in the inscriptional record on the walls of the Perumal temple at Poygai, near Virūchipuram.<sup>2</sup> All these references are not directly connected with the Ājīvikas, nor are they in any way pure Ājīvika references. In many a place the term Ājīvika is used for the Digambara sect of the Jainas.<sup>3</sup>

With these few words about the first important schism in the Jaina church we shall pass on to the second epoch-making division—namely, the Śvetāmbara and the Digambara sects of the Jainas. Really speaking it is very difficult to say as to where lies the first origin of this division in the Jaina community. What both the Digambara and the Śvetāmbara traditions have to say on this and other points referring to each other is at times childish and very often quite unhistorical. Anyhow this much is certain, that this schism has done a lot of harm to the general progress and prosperity of the Jaina community. Both Jaina literature and Jaina history have suffered greatly from contradictory and retaliating traditions put forward by the two divisions. They look at each other as heretics, and sometimes worse than that.<sup>4</sup> In their zeal to keep up the prestige of belonging to the original church of Lord Mahāvīra none of them talks about its own origin, but both make a few sarcastic and sometimes disgraceful remarks about the origin and certain other beliefs of the rival sect.

Taking the Digambara traditions we find that the Digambaras themselves do not agree in their exposition of this division in a Hindu had no special grievance against an Ājīvika, who was popularly regarded as a follower of Viṣṇu or Kṛṣṇa. —Ibid. This is based on the authority of Kern (I A, xx pp. 361 ff.), but there is nothing in Jaina canonical or other literature to support this. Anyhow it may safely be said that it can hardly be a Hindu or a Buddhist who could have done this. The only alternative left is a Jaina. Historically also 'the Jaina Ājīvika enmity makes it almost a certainty. —Sastri (Banarji), op. cit., p. 60. For Hultzsch's statement see C II 1 Int. p. xxviii (new ed. 1925).

<sup>1</sup> Sastri (Banarji), op. cit. p. 53.

<sup>2</sup> Hocutt, op. cit., pp. 266-267.

<sup>3</sup> There can be no doubt therefore that since the 6th century A.D. when Varāhamihira used the term, the name has signified the Digambara sect of the Jainas. — Ibid., p. 266.

<sup>4</sup> इयं उप्पन्नं कहिया मयइयाणं च मग्गभट्टालं । etc. — Devasenāsūri, Bhāvaśaṅgraha (Soni's ed.) v. 160 p. 39. Cf. Premī Darsanaśāra p. 57. मिच्छादमसमिगमो etc. — Ācāryaśāstra p. 321.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the Jaina church Ācārya Devasena says in his Darśanasāra "The Svetāmbara Samgha had its beginning in Vallabhīpura in Sourāshtra 136 years after the death of Vikrama" <sup>1</sup> This origin of the Svetāmbaras according to the learned Ācārya was due "to the wicked and loose-charactered Jinacandra, the disciple of Ācārya Śānti, who was (in turn) the disciple of the venerable Bhadrabāhu" <sup>2</sup>

It is not clear which of the Bhadrabāhus is meant here If this is the Bhadrabāhu of the days of Candragupta the period assigned to the schism would fall to the ground. But according to the Digambara tradition of the great famine in the days of Candragupta, the emigration of Bhadrabāhu and his votaries from the north, and the consequent separation of the Digambaras and the Svetāmbaras, no other Bhadrabāhu is meant here

Devasenasūri has said the same thing in Bhāvasamgraha, but in addition to it he talks of the famine which has been connected with the life of Bhadrabāhu Here also Jinacandra is painted in the same colours He is said to have murdered his Guru, Ācārya Śānti, for rebuking him as being on the wrong path <sup>3</sup> The curious thing is that he also puts the same date for the great schism <sup>4</sup>

In both these Digambara traditions there is distinctly something wrong about the Bhadrabāhu mentioned here There is something half said, or some other Bhadrabāhu is meant, or the traditions are put without any regard for the chronological facts of history To whitewash these two statements Bhattāraka Ratnānandī introduced in his life of Bhadrabāhu the following facts that in Bhadrabāhu's time the schism began under the name of Ardhaphālaka (half-clothed), that Sthūlabhadra, who tried to oppose the propounder of such a change, was murdered by them, and that the final separation came after a long time because of Candralekhā, the daughter of the king of Ujjayini and the wife of the king of Vallabhīpura <sup>5</sup>

In contradiction to this there is another tradition which says

<sup>1</sup> छत्रीने वरिससह सोरठ्ठे उप्पयणो सेवडो यचो । —Premi, Darśanasāra, v 11, p 7

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, vv 12 15

<sup>3</sup> सोसे सोसेण दोहद्वेण । यविरो पात्थण मुणो etc —Devasenasūri, op cit, v 153, p 88 Cf Premi, op cit, p 56

<sup>4</sup> छत्रीने वरिससह सोरठ्ठे उप्पयणो सेवडो यचो etc —Devasenasūri, op cit, v 137, p 85 Cf Premi, op cit, p 55

<sup>5</sup> Premi, op cit, p 60 According to the Digambaras, "under Bhadrabāhu, the eighth age after Mahāvira, the last Tirthankara, there rose the sect of Ardhaphālakas with laxer principles, from which developed the present sect of Svetāmbaras (A D 80)" —Dasgupta, op cit, i, p 170

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

that Sthūlabhadra himself was opposed to the Digambara insistence on nakedness, and that after him his disciple Mahāgiri "revived 'the ideal practice of nakedness' He was a real ascetic and recognised that under Sthūlabhadra's sway many abuses had crept into the order"<sup>1</sup> In this mission of his Mahāgiri was opposed by Suhastin, who was one of the leaders of the Jaina community under Mahāgiri<sup>2</sup> According to the Śvetāmbaras the origin of the great schism lies under the following circumstances In the town of Rathavīra there lived a man named Śivabhūti or Sahasramalla Once his mother got angry with him and hence he left his house and became a Jaina Sādhu It so happened that after his consecration as a monk the ruling prince gave him a valuable blanket, and he felt enamoured of it Seeing this his Guru drew his attention to it, and thenceforth he became all naked and started the Digambara sect of the Jainas His sister Uttarā also tried to follow in the footsteps of her brother, but Śivabhūti, thinking it to be unadvisable for women to remain naked, told her that a woman cannot get final liberation<sup>3</sup>

The date put down by the Śvetāmbaras for this schism is 609 years after Mahāvīra,<sup>4</sup> and this comes to 139 years after the death of Vikrama, taking the traditional duration of 470 years as the period between Vikrama and the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvīra At least in their dates both the Digambara and the Śvetāmbara traditions fully agree The former puts 136 years and the later 139, after Vikrama, as the period for this great division in the Jaina church In spite of this agreement about the date they do not agree as to the circumstances under which arose this great division Both Jinacandra and Śivabhūti look more like fictitious than like true historical persons because the annals of both the rival faiths disclaim the fact of any such person belonging to their division This is why Nathuram Premi, the learned Digambara scholar, says

<sup>1</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 73

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p 74 "I think that the divisions became marked from the time of Ārya Mahāgiri and Ārya-Suhastin"—Jhaveri, Nirvāṇa-Kāhā, Int., p 7

<sup>3</sup> This is given in the प्रवचनपरीक्षा of Upādhyāya Dharmasāgara Cf Hirālāl (H), op cit, pt II, p 15 बोडियसिधभूइउत्तराहि इमं । रहबीरपुरे समुप्यया — Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 324

<sup>4</sup> अज्ञासयाई ननुजराई तइवा सिद्धि गवस बीरस ।

तो बोडियाव दिदी रहबीरपुरे समुप्यया ॥

—Ibid, p 323 "The origin of the Digambaras is attributed to Śivabhūti (A D 83), by the Śvetāmbaras as due to a schism in the old Śvetāmbara church."—Dasgupta, op cit, I, p 170

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

"Can we not infer from this that nobody knew the origin of either of the two divisions? Something must be said, and so afterwards they have put down anything that came into their heads" <sup>1</sup> Though rather harsh this remark is supported by the fact that both the sects agree in the line of Gurus put down from the time of Mahāvīra only as far as Jambūsvāmī, who, according to the traditional date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa, died in 403 B.C. <sup>2</sup> After Jambū both the parties have a list of succession of their teachers which is quite different, but they agree in their account of Bhadrabāhu of the days of Candragupta <sup>3</sup> Really speaking, one cannot arrive at any definite conclusion from all these mutually conflicting traditions, and hence it is almost impossible to fix an exact date for this great schism in the Jaina community.

Along with these difficulties there are two things which should be particularly noticed. The first point is that the two divisions were based on the question whether the Jaina clergy should remain naked or should go about with some sort of garment to cover them. The second thing is the general unanimity about the period of the schism between the two divisions.

The very names of the two divisions connote what is meant by them. The Digambaras or those who are clothed in air, maintained that absolute nudity is a necessary condition of saintship; the other division or the Svetāmbaras those who are dressed in white admit that Mahāvīra went about naked, but hold that the use of clothes does not impede the highest sanctity <sup>4</sup>. If this is the criterion well, both need not quarrel as to which belongs to the original Jaina church, because, as laid down by their own traditions, the original Jaina church has no beginning and no end. Taking it historically and literally, we can say that the Svetāmbaras are more akin to Pārśvanātha than to Mahāvīra and Digambaras are nearer the latter, because Mahāvīra passed many years of his life as a prophet in a naked stage, while both Pārśva and his followers preferred to remain dressed <sup>5</sup>. Furthermore, if the authen-

<sup>1</sup> Prem, op cit p. 30

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Stevenson (Mes), op cit p. 60

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Prem, op cit and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Nudity as a part of asceticism was practised by several sects in the time of Mahāvīra, but it was also repudiated by others (including all Buddhists) who felt it to be barbarous and undignified. Elliot op cit p. 112

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Jacobi, S B F xlv pp. 119-120. The probability is that there had always been two parties in the community—the older and weaker section who wore clothes and dated from Pārśvanātha's time, and who were called Sthavira kalpa (the spiritual tiety of the Svetāmbara canonical literature is granted, we can go a step further and say that though the Digambaras followed the extreme letter of the law as Mahāvīra had done, the Svetāmbaras in no way disregarded the law. This is because, as we have already remarked, that what Mahāvīra experienced in his state of forgetfulness he did not expect his followers to practise literally irrespective of what spiritual height they had reached.

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

With all this the point at issue is not as to which one of these two belonged to the original church, because it is difficult to define what really is or can be the original church of the Jaina community. This is not for a student of history to say. What he is concerned with is to mark out approximately the period whence this schism in the Jaina church had its distinct existence.

A detailed review of the facts before us is out of the question. What need be said is this, that the germ underlying this division had its origin in the days of Mahāvīra, when came Mankhaliputta, who made a cult out of it. After his death no doubt the Ājīvika force was greatly weakened, but there were some among the Niganthas themselves who sympathised with the Ājīvikas "on the points of nakedness, non-possession of a bowl, imperfect regard for life, distinctive mark of a staff and probably other matters."<sup>1</sup> This sympathy on their part might have manifested itself especially in the time of Bhadrabāhu, when, according to the Digambaras, the schism had its first beginning,<sup>2</sup> but there is no distinct separation as yet. We may now pass on to the Sthūlabhadra and Mahāgiri traditions, and then come down to the end of the first century A.D. when, according to both the Digambara and the Svetāmbara traditions, the actual separation takes place.<sup>3</sup> Though the traditional legends put forward by the two divisions are in many respects highly coloured and extremely childish, one thing is clear, that at that particular period in Jaina history some conspicuous ancestors of the Svetāmbara), and the Jina-Kalpa, or Puritans, who kept the extreme letter of the law as Mahāvīra had done, and who are the forerunners of the Digambara"—Stevenson (Mrs.), op cit, p. 79.

<sup>1</sup> Hoernle, op cit pp. 267 ff.

<sup>2</sup> "It thus appears that the Jaina division into Digambara and Svetāmbara may be traced back to the very beginning of Jainism, it being entirely due to the antagonism of the two associated leaders, Mahāvīra and Gosāla, who are the representatives of the two hostile sects."—Hoernle op cit, p. 268.

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Jhaveri, in his Introduction to his edition of Nirāṇa-Kaṅkā, writes: "From the colophon of the work it appears that even in the first century of Vikrama the divisions of the Digambaras and the Svetāmbaras were in existence. The colophon of the Stūpa of Siddhisena Divākara confirms the existence of such division in ancient times"—Int, p. 7.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

or unusual event or incident must have taken place which forms the basis of all these literary traditions. Nevertheless we cannot say that here lies the actual separation of the two divisions, because in the Mathura sculptures we have evidence that points out that the two divisions had till then many things in common which afterwards formulated some of the items on which the two parties could not agree.

To make matters more clear we might say that the chief points on which the two parties particularly do not agree are the following: the insistence of the exchange of the embryo of Mahāvīra, to which the Digambaras do not subscribe, the belief that woman is not entitled to Moksha and that Ketalins do not take food, which are not acceptable to the Svetāmbaras, and finally the Digambara belief in the complete disappearance of the ancient sacred literature of the Jains.<sup>1</sup> Leaving aside some differences in rituals and other minor matters these are some of the prominent features on which the two divisions do not agree.

Now, taking the Mathura sculptures, we find that the particular sculpture referring to the exchange of embryo of Lord Mahāvīra, which we have already mentioned, has represented in it Tīrthankara Mahāvīra in a naked state. The small ascetic at Nemesa's left knee, called in the inscription "divine . . .", is no doubt meant for Mahāvīra, who is introduced by the artists with the attributes of a monk,<sup>2</sup> in order to show the subject to which the conversation refers, and he is represented so small because in reality he is not yet born and has not yet reached the position of an Arhat.<sup>3</sup> Thus this one specimen of Mathura sculpture has combined in itself the Digambara belief of nakedness and the Svetāmbara tradition of the exchange of embryos. This shows that so far back as the first century of the Christian era an actual separation between the parties had not yet taken place.

Nevertheless it must be reiterated that the Jaina iconography in its initial stage is greatly marked with the undressed state of the Jaina Tīrthankaras, and this goes as far back as the second

तस्य कियं नयमेव इत्योक्तं सन्निवृत्तं तन्मयं मोक्षमो ।

केशवस्योक्तं पुत्रो जगन्मया तदा रोको ॥

संवरसहिष्णो वि मई निम्नम् वोरस्त गन्धधारम् ।

<sup>1</sup> "At his (Nemesa's) left knee stands a small naked male, characterised by the cloth in his left hand as an ascetic and with uplifted right hand"—Buhler, E I, II, p. 316

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p. 317

MAHĀVĪRA AND HIS TIMES

century B C, if not further. Mon Mohan Chakravartī, talking of the Jaina monuments on the Udayagiri and the Khandagiri Hills, says "Only the Tirthankaras are represented nude, and even they are occasionally shown dressed, if the scene is intended to represent some scene of their human lives. Females, Kings, Devas, Arhats, Gandharvas, Attendants are generally represented, dressed. In Mathura sculptures the dancing girls, the centaurs, and some of the ascetics (Digambaras) are shown naked. Sometimes the females look naked, but a closer examination shows traces of a very thin fine cloth through which are perceptible the curves of the body"<sup>1</sup>. In later history we find that Varāhamihira, in his Brhat-Samhitā, describes the Jaina Tirthankaras in the following words: "The God of the Jainas is figured naked, young, handsome, with a calm countenance, and arms reaching down to the knees."<sup>2</sup>

Thus, though two distinct divisions had not come into existence till the beginning of the Christian era, it must be admitted that the traditions of Bhadrabāhu of the days of the great famine, and of Jinacandra and Śivabhūti of c. A D 80, are marked stages in the history of the great schism which, in our opinion, led to a final separation of the two parties by the time of the second great council at Vallabhi<sup>3</sup> under Devardhigani, in the middle of the fifth century A D according to the traditional date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa in 527 B C<sup>4</sup>. It may be that the actual division took place a few days before this event, but the final fixing up and reduction into writing of the whole canonical literature of the Jainas at last brought about two distinct divisions before the Jaina community, with differences in matters of certain dogmas and beliefs, which may safely be termed the coincidences natural to a period when everything was to be put into black and white.

This period is confirmed also by James Bird for the great schism, who on the basis of his study of the caves of Western India comes to the following conclusion: "The reputed origin of the Digambara Jainas, about A D 436, harmonises with the date

<sup>1</sup> Chakravartī (Mon Mohan), Notes on the Remains on Dhauh and in the Caves of Udayagiri and Khandagiri, p. 2.

<sup>2</sup> Brhat-Samhitā, chap. lix. trans. by Kern in J R A S (New Series), vi, p. 328. Cf. Chakravartī (Mon Mohan), op. and loc. cit.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Premī, op. cit., p. 31.

<sup>4</sup> "It seems certain that in A D 454 the whole canon was reduced to writing, and that a large number of copies were made, so that no monastery of any consequence should be without one"—Stevenson (Mrs.), op. cit., p. 15.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

assigned for these caves. The Satruñjaya Māhātmya, or the legend of the Jama temples of Pālitānā, in Kathiawar, fixes also this period of the origin of the Digambara Jamas.<sup>1</sup>

In short, the history of this great schism may be summarised as follows in the words of Sir Charles Elliot "It is therefore probable that both Digambaras and Svetāmbaras existed in the infancy of Jainism, and the latter may represent the older sect reformed or exaggerated by Mahāvīra. Thus we are told that 'the law taught by Vardhamāna forbids clothes but that of the great sage Pārśva allows an under and upper garment.' But it was not until considerably later that the schism was completed by the constitution of the two different canons."<sup>2</sup>

In spite of such a complicated history behind this division in the Jama community it must be conceded that there is little of real difference between the two parties. In matters of certain traditional beliefs and dogmas there is no doubt a great distance between the two but most of the controversial points are unnecessary and indirect. This was more or less the feeling of Rāchandji, the most righteous and highly respected Jama of our days.<sup>3</sup> Intellectually too he was a great scholar and his are the sentiments which are also shared by others.

"The Digambaras," says Dr. Dasgupta, "having separated in early times from the Svetāmbaras developed peculiar religious ceremonies of their own and have a different ecclesiastical and literary history, though there is practically no difference about the main creed."<sup>4</sup> Thus the Jama sub-sects did not differ much among themselves in philosophical speculation. Their differences were rather of a practical kind, and, as Wilson has rightly pointed out their "mutual animosity is, as usual of an intensity very disproportionate to the sources from whence it springs."<sup>5</sup>

Leaving aside the second great division in the Jama community we come to the third and the last—viz. that of the non-idolatrious sect of the Svetāmbara Jamas—very often known as the Dhundhū or Sthānakavāsī sect of the Jamas. This division came very late in the history of the Jama church and to some extent it can safely be said that it was greatly a direct result of Mohammedan influence on the religious mind of India. "If one

<sup>1</sup> Bull. Historical Researches p. 72

— Elliot, op. cit., p. 112

<sup>2</sup> विराज्यन्तीति बहु नि स्थलानि तु व्ययाननामनान्यत्र तयोः — Rāchandji, Bhagavatī Sūtra (Jmūgama Prākāśasabdhā) Int. p. 6

<sup>3</sup> Dasgupta op. cit. i. p. 170

<sup>5</sup> Wilson, op. cit., i. p. 340

MAHĀVIRA AND HIS TIMES

effect," observes Mrs Stevenson, "of the Mohammedan conquest, however, was to drive many of the Jains into closer union with their fellow idol-worshippers in the face of iconoclasts, another effect was to drive others away from idolatry altogether. No Oriental could hear a fellow Oriental's passionate outcry against idolatry without doubts as to the righteousness of the practice entering his mind.

"Naturally enough it is in Ahmedabad, the city of Gujarat that was most under Mohammedan influence, that we can first trace the stirring of these doubts. About A.D. 1452 the Lonkā sect, the first of the non-idolatrous Jain sects, arose, and was followed by the Dhundhīā or Sthānakavāsī about A.D. 1653, dates which coincide strikingly with the Lutheran and Puritan movements in Europe."<sup>1</sup>

Little more need we say about this division in the Jain community. Speaking further on the various other splits in the Jain church suffice it to say that the Digambaras are divided into four principal sects,<sup>2</sup> the Svetāmbaras into no less than eighty-four, and at least eleven sub-sects amongst the Sthānakavāsī Jains.<sup>3</sup> None of these is said to be dated earlier than the tenth century A.D., and, except the Sthānakavāsī Jains, most of them have practically died out, though some of them really exist but hardly with any open bitterness or class-hatred amongst themselves as it is between the Digambara and Svetāmbara sects of the Jains.

It may be remarked here that a peculiarity of the Jain church from the very days of Mahāvira and even earlier is its mania for divisions. Whether it is also the case with the other religious communities in India or not we cannot say, but this much seems certain, that it is not to such an extent as it is with the Jains. All the differences that have appeared in the life of the Jain community during these more than two thousand years have generally originated from the following sources: there are some which have originated because of certain disagreement or misunderstanding about the very teachings of Mahāvira, others because of certain peculiarities or characteristics (arising from the country or the class of people to which they originally belonged) of the people who were baptized to Jainism and finally the remaining, who came

<sup>1</sup> Stevenson (Mrs) op cit p. 19.

<sup>2</sup> निगम्बरा पुननाग्न्यलिङ्गा पाणिपावाञ्च ।

ते अनुर्ध, काशसंघ-द्वलसंघ नापुरसंघ-गोप्यसंघभेदाः ।

Prem op cit p. 44

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Stevenson (Mrs), op cit p. 13.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

into existence because of the Jaina clergy as a result of the peculiar fancy or idiosyncrasy of the particular Ācārya or the head of a group of Jaina Sādhus <sup>1</sup>

With all these schisms and divisions in the Jaina church "it is remarkable that Jainism is still a living sect, whereas the Buddhists have disappeared from India" <sup>2</sup> This may sound strange at first sight, but to quote Mr Elliot, "Its strength and persistence are centred in its power of enlisting the interest of the laity and of forming them into a corporation" <sup>3</sup> But among the Buddhists the members of the order came to be regarded more and more as the true church and the laity tended to become (what they actually have become in China and Japan) pious persons who revere that order as something extraneous to themselves and very often only as one among several religious organisations. Hence when in India monasteries decayed or were destroyed, active Buddhism was very little left outside them. But the wandering ascetics of the Jainas never concentrated the strength of the religion in themselves to the same extent, the severity of their rule limited their numbers, the laity were wealthy and practically formed a caste, persecution acted as a tonic. As a result we have a sect analogous in some ways to the Jews, Parsis and Quakers, among all of whom we find the same features—namely, a wealthy laity, little or no sacerdotalism and endurance of persecution" <sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Just to illustrate all these we may take for the first the seven schisms and the Digambara Svetāmbara division in the Jaina church to which we have already referred, for the second we may mention the Ośāl and the Śrīmālā sects of the Jainas, of which the latter is called so 'after the town of Śrīmālā or Bhīllamālā, the modern Bhīmāl in the extreme south of Marwad' (E I ii p 41), and finally for the third we may refer to the 84 Gacchas or divisions of the Svetāmbara Jainas of which Tapa, Kharatara and Aicālā may be particularly mentioned here. Of these, Kharatara Gaccha is said to have originated under the following circumstances: "Jinadatta was a proud man, and even in his port answers to others mentioned by Sumatigani pride can be clearly detached. He was therefore called Kharatara by the people, but he gloried in the new appellation and willingly accepted it"—Hiralal (H), op cit, pt ii, pp 19-20

<sup>2</sup> Elliot op cit, p 122

<sup>3</sup> 'Dr Hoernle is no doubt right in maintaining that this good organisation of the Jaina lay community must have been a factor of the greatest importance to the church during the whole of its existence, and may have been one of the main reasons why the Jaina religion continued to keep its position in India, whilst its far more important rival, Buddhism, was entirely swept away by the Brahman reaction'—Charpentier, CHI, i, pp 168-169

<sup>4</sup> Elliot, op cit p 122. The Buddhists had a similar organisation of monks and laymen, but, as Smith has pointed out, they relied more on the Samgha of ordained friars than on the laity—Cf Smith Oxford History of India, p 52. Among the Jainas the relations between the two sections were more balanced, and hence their social equilibrium was stable—Cf Stevenson (Mrs) op cit, p 67, Macdonell, India's Past, p 70

MAHĀVIRA AND HIS TIMES

The same feeling is entertained by other scholars also,<sup>1</sup> but besides this there are other reasons which cannot be overlooked when we are thinking of everything that contributed to the survival of Jainism to this day. If the fact of their having kept open the doors of the synod of their church to lay representatives contributed to the stability of Jainism, it may be said, side by side, that its adopting a less active missionary career than Buddhism, and preferring as its chief centres of worship more secluded sites, did more so.<sup>2</sup> This enabled the Jainas to resist more successfully the stress of the Brahmanical revival and Mohammedan persecution, under which Buddhism in India collapsed.<sup>3</sup> "The toleration extended to them by the Brahmans, even though they were regarded as heretics, led large numbers of Buddhists to take refuge in their community in the days of the persecution."<sup>4</sup> Thus they were able to hold on till the period of the Mohammedan domination, "which, while it evidently contributed to the religious, political and social dismemberment of the nation, everywhere showed itself conservative of minorities, small associations, and small churches."<sup>5</sup>

According to Drs Charpentier and Jacobi what most enabled Jainism to weather the storms that in India wrecked so many of the other faiths was their more or less rigid fidelity or their everyday anxiety to stick to the doctrines that had come down to them since the days of Mahāvira. "The inflexible conservatism of the small Jaina community in holding fast to its original institutions and doctrine has probably been the chief cause of its survival

<sup>1</sup> Dr Hoernle's discussion of this subject in his Presidential address of 1898 before the Asiatic Society of Bengal was singularly luminous, emphasising as it did the place accorded from the very first to the lay adherent as an integral part of the Jaina organisation. In the Buddhist order, on the other hand, the lay element received no formal recognition whatsoever. Lacking thus any bond with the broad strata of the secular life of the people, Buddhism, under the fierce assault on its monastic settlements made by the Moslems of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, proved incompetent to maintain itself and simply disappeared from the land. Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, Int., p. xii. Cf. also Charpentier op cit, pp. 168-169; Hoernle, Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal 1898, p. 53.

<sup>2</sup> Jainism, less enterprising but more speculative than Buddhism, and lacking the active missionary spirit that in early times dominated the latter, has been content to spend a quiet life within comparatively narrow borders and can show to day in Western and Southern India not only prosperous monastic establishments but also lay communities, small perhaps, yet wealthy and influential. --Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, Int., p. xii. "Never rising to an overpowering height but at the same time never showing the fate of its rival Buddhism, that of complete extinction in its native land." Charpentier, op cit, pp. 169-170.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Crooke, F R E N, p. 496.

<sup>4</sup> Tiele, op cit, p. 141.

<sup>5</sup> Barth, op cit, p. 152.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

during periods of severe affliction, for as Professor Jacobi has pointed out long ago there can be little doubt that the most important doctrines of the Jaina religion have remained practically unaltered since the first great separation in the time of Bhadrabāhu, about 300 B.C. And although a number of less vital rules concerning the life and practices of the monks and laymen, which we find recorded in the holy scriptures, may have fallen into oblivion or disuse, there is no reason to doubt that the religious life of the Jaina community is now substantially the same as it was two thousand years ago. It must be confessed from this that an absolute refusal to admit changes has been the strongest safeguard of the Jainas.<sup>1</sup>

It is doubtful if this conservative nature can any more help the Jaina community as it stands now. To a student of present-day contemporary religions it would seem otherwise. In conservatism he would see signs of intolerance, stagnation and religious hypocrisy. From dedicatory inscriptions and other records Sir Charles Elliot may conclude: 'We learn from these records that the sect comprised a great number of schools and divisions. We need not suppose that the different teachers were necessarily hostile to one another, but their existence testifies to an activity and freedom of interpretation which have left traces in the multitude of modern sub-sects.'<sup>2</sup> But one thing is certain, that these different teachers have, in trying to grind their own axes, disregarded the general good of the whole Jaina community.

Colonel Tod has rightly remarked: 'Tapa-Gaccha and Kharatara-Gaccha did much more harm than the Islamites to destroy all records of the past.'<sup>3</sup> Well, the same thing may be said of the Digambara and the Svetāmbara divisions of the Jainas. Their attitude towards each other, both in the past and as it is now, does in no way do any justice to the followers of Lord Mahāvīra. One need not be misunderstood if one were to express one's fears that if this aggressive attitude and mutual distrust amongst the existing divisions in the Jaina community were to go on at this rate a time may come when the Jainas may have to share the same fate as that of their brothers, the Buddhists.

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier op cit. p. 169. Cf. Uccola J.D.M.G., xxxviii, pp. 17 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Elliot op cit. p. 11.

<sup>3</sup> Tod Travels in Western India, p. 284.

CHAPTER III

Jainism in Royal Families

800-200 B C

I

IN our previous chapters we saw all that could be said about the Jaina church. That Pārsva could be historically identified and that Mahāvīra had blood-relations with some royal families of his time are facts that count much when we are out to investigate the circumstances under which "Jainism became the state religion of certain kingdoms, in the sense that it was adopted and encouraged by certain kings, who carried with them many of their subjects."<sup>1</sup>

This is nothing but ascribing the history of the Jains of North India with all its legitimate historical background of that part of the country. In other words, the aim of this chapter is to draw, as far as possible, an exact picture of the Jains of North India in their relations with the ruling dynasties of their times.

Taking first the times of Pārsva, we find that there is hardly any material available on which we can rely. Very "scanty is our knowledge of the life and teaching of Pārsva, in spite of the large body of literature which has clustered around his name."<sup>2</sup> As seen before, all that we know of any historical importance in connection with him is that he was born of King Āśvasena of Benares, who belonged to 'the Ikshvāku race of the Kshatriyas,<sup>3</sup> and that he reached his final liberation Nirvāna, on the top of Mount Summeta in Bengal. In his marital relations he was connected with the royal family of King Prasenajit, whose father, Naravarman, who designated himself as the lord of the universe

<sup>1</sup> Smith op cit, p. 55

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, p. 153

<sup>3</sup> अनुगं नगपतिं वाराणस्यभिधानत ॥

तस्यामिताकुवशोभन्त्यसेनो महोपति ।

— Hemacandra Trishashti Śalākā, Parva IX vs. 8, 14, p. 196

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

and who had in his lifetime become a Jaina Sādhu, was ruling at Kuśasthala, and whose daughter Prabhāvatī was married to Pārśva <sup>1</sup>

It is difficult to say as to how far these facts can be taken as historically true. The trouble is, for all this, that we have got to wholly rely on whatever data the Jainas put before us, because there is no other historical monument or record which can be taken into consideration for the purposes of this history. But the same difficulty arises with the whole of Indian history of the days prior to Alexander the Great, and sometimes even later than that. Fortunately, as already remarked, looking to the great historical worth and the literary value attributed to the Jaina canonical and other literature of the centuries before the Christian era by some of the eminent scholars and historians of our day, it will not be too much to say that with the Buddhist and Hindu annals Jaina annals too have their place, and a due consideration should be extended to them also.

In the words of Dr Jacobi, "The origin and development of the Jaina sect is a subject on which some scholars still think it safe to speak with a sceptical caution, though this seems little warranted by the present state of the whole question, for a large and ancient literature has been made accessible, and furnishes ample materials for the early history of the sect to all who are willing to collect them. Nor is the nature of these materials such as to make us distrust them. We know that the sacred books of the Jainas are old, & vowedly older than the Sanskrit literature which we are accustomed to call classical. Regarding their antiquity, many of those books can vie with the oldest books of the northern Buddhists. As the latter books have successively been used as materials for the history of Buddha and Buddhism, we can find no reason why we should distrust the sacred books of the Jainas as an authentic source of their history. If they were full of contradictory statements, or the dates contained in them would lead to contradictory conclusions, we should be justified in viewing all theories based on such materials with suspicion. But the character of the Jaina

<sup>1</sup> पुर कुशस्थल नाम ॥ तत्रासोज्जरवर्मेति । पृथिवीपति ॥ जैनधर्मे रतो जित् ।
उपात्त परित्रया सुभापुगुरुसन्निधि ॥ राज्येभ्यश्चरवर्मेण । सुनु प्रसेनजित्नाम ॥ तस्य
प्रभारती नाम । कन्यका ॥ पार्श्वी । उदुवाह प्रभावती ॥—Hemacandra,
Trishashti Sādhā Parva IX vv. 58, 59, 61, 62, 68, 69, 210, pp. 19b, 20a

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

literature differs little in this respect also from the Buddhistical, at least from that of the northern Buddhists " <sup>1</sup>

Thus with the material that is at our disposal it is very difficult to historically identify the Aśvasena of Benares or Kāśī, <sup>2</sup> and the Prasenaṇjit or his father Naravarman of Kuśasthala, but there are other historical and geographical coincidences from which we can deduce certain inferences which may be said to have some historical significance behind them

Now, on the authority of Hemacandra's "Hemakośa," Nundo Lal Dey has identified Kuśasthala with Kanauj or Kanyākubja, <sup>3</sup> and this is supported by other scholars also <sup>4</sup> Furthermore, Dr Raychaudhuri tells us as to how the Pañcālas were connected "with the foundation of the famous city of Kanyākubja or Kanauj" <sup>5</sup> Again this fact of there existing side by side the kingdoms of Kāśī and Pañcāla is further supported by both the Buddhist and the Jaina literary traditions From the Buddhist Anguttara Nikāya and the Jaina Bhagavati-Sūtra we know that during this period (i.e. during the eighth century B.C.) "there were sixteen states of considerable extent and power known as the Solas Mahājanapada" <sup>6</sup> Of these Kāśī, among others, is common to both, while Pañcāla is mentioned only by the former <sup>7</sup>

Taking the history of Pañcāla we find that it roughly corresponds to Rohilkhand and a part of the central Doāb "The Mahābhārata, the Jātakas and the Dvyaśvadāna refer to the division of this state into northern and southern The Bhāgirathī (Ganges) formed the dividing line According to the Great Epic, Northern Pañcāla had its capital at Ahicchatra or Chatravatī (the modern

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, SBE, xxii, Int. p. ix "We must leave to future researchers to work out the details, but I hope to have removed the doubts, entertained by some scholars, about the independence of the Jaina religion and the value of its sacred books as trustworthy documents for the elucidation of its early history"—Ibid, Int. p. xlvii Cf. Charpentier, Uttarādhyayana Sūtra, Int., p. 25

<sup>2</sup> "No such person as Aśvasena is known from Brahman record to have existed, the only individual of that name mentioned in the epic literature was a king of the snakes (Nāga) and he cannot in any way be connected with the father of the Jaina prophet — Charpentier CH I, i, p. 154 It may, by the way, be mentioned here that all his life Pārśvanātha was connected with snakes, and to this day the saint's symbol is a hooded serpent's head Cf. Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, pp. 48-49

<sup>3</sup> Dey, op cit, pp. 88, 111

<sup>4</sup> "Kanyākubja was also called Gādhapura, Mahodaya and Kuśasthala" — Cunningham, Ancient Geography of India (ed. Mazumdar), p. 707

<sup>5</sup> Raychaudhuri, Political History of Ancient India, p. 86 "Kanauj was primarily the capital of the kingdom of Pañcāla"—Smith, Early History of India, p. 391

<sup>6</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp. 59, 60 Cf. Rhys Davids, CH I, i, p. 172

<sup>7</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 60

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Rāmnaḡar near Aonlā in the Bareilly District), while Southern Pañcāla had its capital at Kāmpilya, and stretched from the Gaṅges to the Chambal" <sup>1</sup>

Along with this background of the Pañcāla history we have direct references to it in the Jaina annals as well. The Uttarā-dhyayana-Sūtra mentions a great Pañcāla king named Brahmadatta, who was born of Culanī in Kāmpilya <sup>2</sup>. He meets Citta, his brother in a former birth, and who has become a Śramana in this. Brahmadatta is styled a universal monarch, and he is so fond of worldly pleasure that he does not care for the advice of his brother Citta and finally goes to hell <sup>3</sup>.

A further reference in this direction by the same Sūtra is also to a king of Kāmpilya named Sañjaya, who "gave up his kingly power and adopted the faith of the Jinas in the presence of the venerable monk Gardabhāh" <sup>4</sup>.

Thus it seems probable that Kāsi and Pañcāla, the two of the "sixteen states of considerable extent and power," <sup>5</sup> were joined together on matrimonial grounds, and the probability becomes more of a certainty when we know from the dynastic lists prepared by Pargiter that there was some Senajit who was one of the rulers of Southern Pañcāla <sup>6</sup>. Doing away with some superficial variations in names, this Senajit can with no historical

<sup>1</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 85. Cf. also Smith, op cit, pp. 391-392, Dey, op cit, p. 145.

<sup>2</sup> "Little is known about the history of Kāmpilya, apparently the modern Kāmpīl in the Farrukabad District"—Smith, op cit, p. 392.

<sup>3</sup> पुलकीट बन्धुको ॥ कम्पिले तम्भूको पिबो । धम्म सोऊल पइइको ॥
पंचालराया वि य बन्धुको तस्स वयस ऊकाई । सो नरर पविट्ठो ॥—Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Lecture XIII, vv. 1, 2, 34. Cf. Jacobi, S B E, div. pp. 57-61. The stories about Kitta (Citta) and Sambhuta (Brahmadatta) and the fate they underwent in many births are common to Brahmans, Jainas and Buddhists. Cf. ibid, pp. 56, 57, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 86, Charpentier, Uttarādhyayana, pt. II, pp. 328-331.

<sup>4</sup> कम्पिले नये राया ।

नामेलो संजये ॥

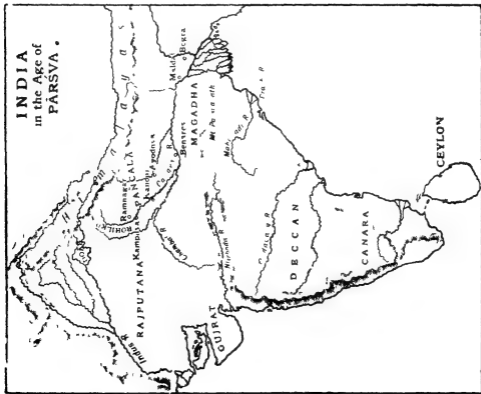

संजयो जइं रज्जं निक्खल्लो जिहसासये ।

गहभासिस्स भगवणो जग्गारस्स जज्जिह ॥

—Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Lecture XVIII, vv. 1, 19. Cf. Jacobi, op cit, pp. 80, 82, Raychaudhuri, op cit and loc cit.

<sup>5</sup> "The Jainas also afford testimony to the greatness of Kāsi, and represent Aśvasena, kin. of Benares, as the father of that Tirthankara Pārśva who is said to have died 250 years before Mahāvīra—i.e. in 777 B.C."—Ibid, op cit, p. 61. Taking 480-467 B.C. as the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa we get 730-717 as the date of Pārśva's Nirvāṇa.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Pargiter, Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, p. 146, Pradhan, Chronology of Ancient India, p. 103.

See page 83

See page 99

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

fallacy be identified with Prasenajit, with whom we are here concerned<sup>1</sup>

The most important and the only inference that we may draw from this is that Jainism in the days of Pārśva enjoyed no less royal patronage than in the days of Mahāvīra. The extent of his influence was in no way less extensive than during the career of his successor. He was a member of the royal family of Kāśī, son-in-law to that of Pañcāla,<sup>2</sup> and he died on the top of Mount Pārśvanātha in Bengal<sup>3</sup>. With this royal backing behind him it is natural that he must have had great influence on contemporary royalties and on his own subjects also. From Sūtrakṛtāṅga and other Jaina canonical books we know that even in the days of Mahāvīra there were followers of Pārśva round about Magadha<sup>4</sup>. As seen before, the very family of Mahāvīra was attached to the religion of Pārśva. In addition to this the reference made in the Jaina canonical books to the actual following of Pārśva in his own days confirms the fact that the Jaina community had spread well even in those early days throughout a great portion of North India, though it is not possible to put down any geographical limits<sup>5</sup>. As already mentioned, there were 16,000 monks, 38,000 nuns, 164,000

<sup>1</sup> "In other cases the first component is omitted. Bhāgavata calls Prasenajit of Ayodhya Senajit"—Pargiter, op cit, p. 127

<sup>2</sup> Mazumdar seems to be labouring under some confusion here. According to him Pārśva was a son-in-law of King Prasenajit of Oudh, and thus he connects the two dynasties of Kosala and Kāśī, but we think he has wrongly identified him with the Prasenajit of the days of Mahāvīra, who was the father-in-law of King Bimbisāra, the great Śaśunāga, and one of the greatest royal supporters of Jainism. Furthermore he commits the same blunder when he says that Pārśva died at the age of seventy-two. We have already seen it was Mahāvīra who lived for seventy-two years, while Pārśva lived for one hundred. Cf. Mazumdar, op cit, pp. 495, 551, 552. Mrs. Stevenson also seems to be under the same misconception when she says, "Pārśvanātha married Prabhāvatī, daughter of Prasannajita, king of Ayodhya"—Stevenson (Mrs.), op cit, p. 48.

<sup>3</sup> "he reached deliverance at last on Mount Sameta Sikkhara in Bengal, which was thenceforth known as the Mount Pārśvanātha"—Ibid, p. 49.

<sup>4</sup> "Outside of Rājagṛha, in a north-eastern direction, there was the suburb Nālandā, and there in some house the venerable Gautama was staying. The venerable (man) was in the garden, and so was Udaya, the son of Pādāla, a Nirgrantha and follower of Pārśva"—Jacobi, op cit, pp. 419-420, जिसे वाणि . तस्य वेदीकुमारचरणे . . .

शक्तिं पुनः . . . —Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Lecture XXIII, vv. 1-3. Cf. Jacobi, op cit, pp. 119-120.

<sup>5</sup> One does not know on what grounds Mazumdar tries to define geographically the limits of Jainism in the days of Pārśva. "His Jainism," observes the learned scholar, "prevailed from Bengal to Gujarat. The districts of Māldah and Bogrā were great centres of his faith. His converts were mostly from the depressed classes of the Hindus and Non-Aryans. In Rajputana his adherents grew very powerful"—Mazumdar, op and loc cit.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

lay-votaries, 327,000 female lay-votaries and a few thousands more belonging to the higher grade of religious qualification <sup>1</sup>

From Pārśva to Mahāvira there are no data of any historical worth. A period of two hundred and fifty years in Jaina history has to remain blank because of the absence of any historical records or monuments on which we can rely for purposes of history. Anyhow this much is certain, that though it is not possible at present historically to fill up the gap between the last two prophets of the Jainas, it may safely be said that throughout this period Jainism was a living religion <sup>2</sup>. As already seen, all along the Jaina clergy of Pārśva's school of thought were exerting their own influence, and Mahāvira and some of his followers had regularly to face some representatives of that class just to win them over to the reformed church of the sixth century B.C.

Coming to the days of Mahāvira one seems to feel as if a better situation has to be met with, but here also, barring the canonical literature of the Jainas and the Buddhas and certain other traditions, there is hardly anything on which we can fall back upon <sup>3</sup>. Fortunately for us, the Jaina sacred books have preserved facts and comments which, though in bits and fragments, are yet sufficient to hold up before our eyes a living picture of this period of the Jaina history. Like Pārśva, Mahāvira also had his blood-relations with the ruling dynasties of his age. His father, Siddhārtha, was a great nobleman himself, and he belonged to the clan of the Jñātri Kshatriyas. His headquarters were at Kundapura or Kundagāma (Kundagrāma),<sup>4</sup> and from the way in which he is

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Jacobi, S.B.F. xxii p. 274

एव विहरतो भूतुः सहस्रं बोद्धव्यम् ।
सहस्रविंशत्सहस्राणि साधनानि तु महात्मनः ॥
आनकाणां लब्धमेकं चतुःषष्टिसहस्रयुक्तम् ॥
आविकाणां तु विलसती सहस्रं सप्तविंशतिः ।

—Hemacandra op cit vv 312, 314 315, p. 219 Cf. Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā, sū 161 164, pp. 130 131

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Hoernle, Uvāga Dāsā ii, p. 6 n. 8

<sup>3</sup> "Early Indian history as yet resembles those maps of our grandfathers in which Geographers for lack of towns Drew elephants on pathless downs though the Jainas have kept historical records of their own, it is very difficult to correlate these records with known facts in the world's history"—Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p. 7

<sup>4</sup> It is another name for Vaisālī (modern Besārh) in the district of Morāffarpur (Tirhut), in fact Kundagāma (Kundagrāma) now called Basukund, was a part of the ancient town of Vaisālī, the latter comprising three districts or quarters. Vaisālī proper (Besārh), Kundapur (Basukund), and Vāmagāma (Banā)'.—Dey, op cit, p. 107

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

pictured in the Jaina sacred books it seems he was the head of the clan to which he belonged, and a ruler of some state, whether great or small<sup>1</sup> As we shall see later on, it may be that he was one of the executive of the republic of which Kundapura was a leading division, but from the status that he enjoyed in society this much is certain, that Siddhārtha spent his life more or less as an independent ruler than as a mere petty chieftain under a sovereign state<sup>2</sup>

Again referring to the sixteen Mahājanapadas we find that the state of Vajji is also common to both the Buddhist and the Jaina lists "The Vajjis," observes Dr Raychaudhuri, "according to Professor Rhys Davids and Cunningham, included eight confederate clans (Atthakula), of whom the Videhans, the Licchavis, the Jñātrikas and the Vajjis proper were the most important The identity of the remaining clans remains uncertain. It may, however, be noted here that in a passage of the Sūtrakṛtāṅga the Ugras, Bhogas, Aikshavākas and Kauravas are associated with the Jñātris and Licchavis as subjects of the same rulers and the members of the same assembly."<sup>3</sup>

On the other hand, on the authority of the Buddhist sources Dr Pradhan adds one more member to this confederacy, and observes "This confederacy consisted of nine clans, some of which were the Licchavis (or Licchavis), the Vṛjis (or Vajjis), the Jñātrikas, and the Videhas This confederacy of nine clans was known as the confederacy of the Vṛjis or of the Licchavis, as the Vṛjis and the Licchavis were the most important of the nine clans These nine Licchivi clans again federated themselves with the nine

<sup>1</sup> In the Kalpa-Sūtra the interpreters of the dreams of Trisālā, mother of Mahāvīra, are said to have come "to the front gate of Siddhārtha's excellent palace, a jewel of its kind"—Jacobi, op cit, p 245 At another place in the same Sūtra Siddhārtha is said to have celebrated the birthday of Mahāvīra by ordering his police authorities quickly to set free all prisoners in the town of Kundapura, to increase measures and weights, and so on Cf ibid, p 252, Hemacandra, op cit, Parva X, vv 128, 132, p 16

<sup>2</sup> Barnett, the Antagada Dasāo and Anuttaravādāya-Dasāo, Int., p vi Dr Jacobi, in trying to expose the fond belief of the Jainas that "Kundagrāma was a large town and Siddhārtha a powerful monarch," seems to have gone to the other extreme when he observes "From all this it appears that Siddhārtha was no king, nor even the head of his clan, but in all probability only exercised the degree of authority which in the East usually falls to the share of landowners, especially of those belonging to the recognised aristocracy of the country"—Jacobi, op cit, Int., p xii

<sup>3</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp 73-74 "The Ugras and Bhogas were Kshatriyas The former were, according to the Jainas, descendants of those whom Rshabha, the first Tirthankara, appointed to the office of Kotwals, or prefects of towns, while the Bhogas were descendants of those whom Rshabha acknowledged as persons deserving honour."—Jacobi, S.B.E., xiv, p 71, n 2 Cf Hoernle, op cit, Appendix III, p 58

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Mallakī clans and the eighteen Ganarājās of Kāśī-Kosala.”<sup>1</sup> This statement of the learned scholar is also supported by the Jaina annals<sup>2</sup>

“It is related,” observes Dr Jacobi, “that King Cetaka, whom Kūnika, king of Campā, prepared to attack with a strong army, called together the eighteen confederate kings of Kāśī and Kosala, the Licchavis and Mallakīs, and asked them whether they would satisfy Kūnika’s demands or go to war with him. Again on the death of Mahāvira the eighteen confederate kings, mentioned above, instituted a festival to be held in memory of that event.”<sup>3</sup>

From all this it seems highly probable that of all these confederate clans one common characteristic was that most of them had directly or indirectly come under the influence of Mahāvira or his teaching. Whether all of them were Jainas by faith or not one cannot say, but this much is certain, that there was something more solid than mere lip-sympathy on their part.

Taking first the Videhans, we find that they “had their capital at Mithilā, which is identified by some scholars with the small town of Janakpur, just within the Nepal border. But a section of them may have settled in Vaiśālī. To this section probably belonged the princess Trisālā, also called Videhadattā, mother of Mahāvira.”<sup>4</sup> As already mentioned, we find scattered here and there direct references to Mahāvira’s relations with the Videhans in the Jaina Sūtras. Says the Ācārāṅga-Sūtra “His (Mahāvira’s) mother had three names Trisālā, Videhadattā and Priyakārī.”<sup>5</sup>

“In that period, in that age, the Venerable ascetic Mahāvira, a Jñātrī Kshatriya, Jñātrīputra, a native of Videha, a prince of Videha, lived thirty years under the name of ‘Videha.’”<sup>6</sup>

Coming next to the Kalpa-Sūtra “The Venerable ascetic Mahāvira, a Jñātrī Kshatriya, the son of a Jñātrī Kshatriya, the moon of the clan of the Jñātris, a Videha, the son of Vide-

<sup>1</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p. 215

<sup>2</sup> नव नक्षत्र नव लेखक कालीकोसलगा अट्टारसवि गणरायाणो — Bhagavati, sūt 300, p. 316 Cf. Hemacandra, op cit, p. 165

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, S B E, xxii, Int., p. xii Cf. ibid, p. 266, Law (B. C.), Some Kshatriya Tribes of Ancient India, p. 11, Raychaudhuri, op cit p. 128, Bhagavati, sūt 300, p. 316, Hemacandra, op and loc cit, Kalpa Sūtra, Subhodhikā-Tīkā, sūt 128, p. 121, Pradhan, op cit, pp. 128-129, Hoernle, op cit, ii, Appendix II, pp. 59-60

<sup>4</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit p. 74 समलस न भगवती महावीरस माया तिसला इ वा विदेहिना इ वा योइकारिणी इ वा — Kalpa Sūtra, Subhodhikā Tīkā, sūt 109, p. 89

<sup>5</sup> Jacobi, op cit, p. 103

<sup>6</sup> Ibid, p. 194

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

hadattā, a native of Videha, a prince of Videha—had lived thirty years in Videha when his parents went to the gods (i.e. died) ”<sup>1</sup>

Thus from the Jaina Sūtras themselves the following points are confirmed that a section of the Videhans had settled in Vaiśālī, “the capital of Videha ”<sup>2</sup>, that Princess Trisālā belonged to this section of the Videhans, and that Mahāvīra was closely connected with them. With all this the first point still needs some more elucidation. As Mahāvīra was a Videhan, even so according to Jacobi he was also a Vaisālīka—i.e. a native of Vaiśālī. Thus Kundapura or Kundagrāma of King Siddhārtha cannot but be a prominent part of Vaiśālī, the capital of the reigning line of Videha.<sup>3</sup>

In addition to all these references confirming the close relationship that existed between Mahāvīra and the Videhans there are certain other indications in the sacred books of the Jainas which go to assert that the Videhans had a living interest in the Jain church. Talking about Nami, the royal seer, the Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra says

नमो नमस्त्वं जम्बूद्वीपे सत्त्वो बोद्धो ।
चन्द्रो गेहं च वेदेहि जम्बूद्वीपे पञ्चमुद्विषो ॥

‘Nami humbled himself, enjoined by Sakra in person, the king of Videha left the house, and took upon him Śramanahood ’<sup>4</sup>

Besides this from the Kalpa-Sūtra we know that at Mithilā, the metropolis of Videha, Mahāvīra spent six rainy-seasons. This shows how far Mahāvīra was connected with the Videhans. In short, from what we have seen about them one thing is clear—that if not all, there was at least a section amongst the Videhans who were real Jainas.

Coming next to the Licchavis we find that they were a great and powerful people in Eastern India in the sixth century before Christ. There is no use denying the fact that with the Jñātrikas they must have come directly under the influence of the teaching

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, op cit, p. 256

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, Int., p. xi

<sup>3</sup> “Kundagrāma, therefore, was probably one of the suburbs of Vaiśālī, the capital of Videha. This conjecture is borne out by the name Vesahe—i.e. Vaisālīka—given to Mahāvīra in the Sūtrakṛtāṅga, 1, 8. The commentator explains the passage in question in two different ways, and at another place a third explanation is given. Vaisālīka apparently means a native of Vaiśālī and Mahāvīra could be rightly called that when Kundagrāma was a suburb of Vaiśālī, just as a native of Turnham Green may be called a Londoner ”—Ibid

<sup>4</sup> Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Lecture IX, v. 61. Cf. ibid, v. 62, Lecture XVIII, v. 45 (trans. Jacobi, SBE, xlv, pp. 41, 87). For a full description of the legendary tale of Nami see Meyer (J. J.), Hindu Tales, pp. 147-169.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

of Mahāvira His mother Trisālā was sister to Cetaka, king of Vaisālī,<sup>1</sup> who belonged to the Licchavi sect of the Kshatriyas, while on his father's side Mahāvira was a Jñātrika himself

Here arises the difficulty that if Trisālā was the Licchavi princess there is no reason why she should be called Videhadattā<sup>2</sup> The possible explanation that can be given for this is that she was so called because she belonged to that part of the country which was originally known as Videha, and, as we have just remarked, Vaisālī was the capital of Videha Furthermore, in the words of Dr Raychaudhuri, "the Vajjian confederation must have been organised after the fall of the royal houses of Videha Political evolution in India thus resembles closely the political evolution in the ancient cities of Greece, where also the monarchies of the Heroic age were succeeded by aristocratic republics"<sup>3</sup> Moreover, in confirmation with other traditions this leads to a further surmise—that after the fall of the Videhans a section of them might also have been called the Licchavis<sup>4</sup>

Thus there is nothing unnatural or out of the way if Trisālā was called Videhadattā though she was a Licchavi princess Now this Trisālā was married to Siddhārtha, who, according to the Jainas, was a follower of Pārsva, the predecessor of Lord Mahāvira This naturally leads one to infer that either the royal family of the Licchavis was Jaina by faith or that it was socially so situated that it could take a member of the other Jaina royal family as a bridegroom for its princess This incident alone warrants the conclusion that the Licchavis had a distinct sympathy and respect for the Jainas, but the literary and the historical traditions of the Jainas do not stop with this solitary incident alone We further know that Cellanā (also called Vedehi), the youngest of the seven daughters of King Cetaka,<sup>5</sup> was married to Bimbisāra, the great Śaśunāga of Magadha, and that both Bimbisāra and Cellanā were great Jainas themselves<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi Kalpa Sūtra p. 118

<sup>2</sup> "In the opinion of several scholars Cetaka was a Licchavi But the secondary names of his sister (Videhadattā) and daughter (Vedehi) probably indicate that he was a Videhan domiciled at Vesālī"—Raychaudhuri op cit, p. 78, n. 2

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p. 76

<sup>4</sup> "In the time of Buddha and for many centuries afterwards, the people of Vaisālī were called Licchavis, and in the Trikaṇḍaśeṣa the names of Licchavi, Videhi, and Tirabhukti have been given as synonymous"—Cunningham op cit, p. 509

<sup>5</sup> वेसालिखी बहली बन्धुयाली —Āvaśyaka Sūtra, p. 376

<sup>6</sup> "Bimbisāra had a son known as Vedehi Putto Ajātsattā in the canonical Pāli texts, and as Kūṇika by the Jainas The later Buddhist tradition makes him a son of the

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Besides Cellanā, Cetaka had six other daughters, out of whom one preferred to be a nun and the other five were married in one or the other royal family of Eastern India. How far this fact can be taken as an historical truth we cannot say, but hardly with any exception almost all those ruling dynasties with whom the Licchavis were thus connected can be fully identified in the light of modern research. The names of these Licchavi princesses are Prabhāvatī, Padmāvatī, Mrgāvatī, Śivā, Jyeshthā, Sujyeshthā and Cellanā <sup>1</sup>

Of these, Prabhāvatī, the eldest, was married to King Udāyana of Vitabhava, which has been identified at various places in the Jaina literature with a town of Sindhu-Sauvīra-Deśa <sup>2</sup>. But to what part of the country these literary evidences allude we cannot exactly say, because on the basis of various sources it has been identified with different places in the west and north-west of India. Cunningham identifies it with "the province of Badari or Eder, at the head of the Gulf of Cambay" <sup>3</sup>. Dr Rhys Davids more or less agrees with Cunningham, and places Sauvīra in his map to the north of Kathiawar and along the Gulf of Cutch <sup>4</sup>. Alberuni identifies it with Multan and Jahrvār, and this is also accepted by Mr Dey <sup>5</sup>.

On the other hand the Jaina traditions are as follows.

Abhayadevasūri, in his commentary on the Bhagavatī, puts his interpretation in the following words: सिन्धुनद्या सासदा सोवीरा-जनपदविज्ञेया सिन्धुसोवीरेषु विगता ईतयो भयानि च यतस्तद्भीतिभयं विदध्मेति केषिन् <sup>6</sup>.

The story of Udāyana translated by Meyer from the Uttarā-dhyayana-Sūtra mentions Vitabhaya as follows: "There was in Kosala Devī, the Jaina tradition, confirmed by the standing epithet of Vedehi Putto, son of the princess of Videha, in the older Buddhist books makes him a son of Cellanā" — Rhys Davids, CH I, i, p. 183.

देव्या चेत्तया सार्धमपराङ्मुख्यदा नृप ।
वीरं समवसरणस्थितं वन्दितुमभ्यगात् ॥
वन्दित्वा श्रीमदहेन वलिनीं तौ च दंपती ।

—Hemacandra op cit, vv 11-12, p. 86

<sup>1</sup> Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p. 676, Hemacandra, op cit, v 187, p. 77

<sup>2</sup> सिन्धुसोवीरेषु वीतीभट्ट नगरे उदायण नाम राजा तस्स पभावती नाम देवी
—Bhagavatī, sūt 491, p. 618 Cf also Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p. 676, Hemacandra, op cit, v 190, p. 77, सिन्धुसोवीरदेशेऽस्ति पुरं वीतीभयाह्वयम् । —Ibid, v 327, p. 147, Meyer (J J), op cit, p. 97

<sup>3</sup> Cunningham, op cit, p. 569

<sup>4</sup> Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, map facing p. 320

<sup>5</sup> Sachau, Alberuni's India, i, p. 302 Cf Dey, op cit, p. 183

<sup>6</sup> Bhagavatī, sūt 492, pp. 820-821

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

a city in the countries of Sindhu and Sovira, called Viyabhaya, a king, Udāyana by name " 1

" The Satruñjaya Māhātmya places it in Sindhu or Sind " 2

From all these identifications it seems that the country roughly corresponds to a portion of Sind on the east of the River Indus and of Rajputana to the north-west of Malwa. This is also confirmed by the fact that Udāyana went through the deserts of Marwar and Rajputana, where his army began to die of thirst during the war which he had declared against the king of Avanti " 3

Besides these identifications one thing we get about Sindhu-Sauvira-Deśa from Varāhamihira's division of Bhāratavarsha is this, that it formed one of the nine divisions into which the country was divided " 4 The historical and geographical importance accruing from this justifies the Jaina sources to some extent when they say that, along with Vitabhaya, Udāyana was the overlord of three hundred and sixty-three other towns " 5 Furthermore, from the life of Kumārapāla of the twelfth century A.D. we know that during his career he brought to Pattana " 6 a Jaina idol " 7 which, according to

<sup>1</sup> Meyer (J J), op cit, p. 97. For the story in the Uttarādhyayana see Laxmi-Vallabha's commentary (Dhanapatasimha's edition), pp. 552-561.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Dey, op cit, p. 183.

<sup>3</sup> उदायना च महं कल्याणारक्षुषा नृसिंहारम्. Āśvāyaka-Sūtra, p. 209. Cf. Meyer (J J), op cit, p. 109. It may be mentioned here that according to the Buddhist traditions, Roruka was the capital of Sauvira. Cf. CH I, i, p. 173, Dey, op cit, p. 170. According to Cunningham, Roruka was "probably Alor, the old city of Sind."—Cunningham, op cit, p. 700.

<sup>4</sup> Varāhamihira calls each of the Nava Khandas a Varga. He says "By them (the Vargas) Bhāratavarsha—i.e. half of the world—is divided into nine parts: the central one, the eastern one, etc."—Sachau, op cit, p. 297. (cf. ibid, pp. 298-302, Cunningham, op cit, p. 6). "According to this arrangement Sindhu Sauvira was the chief district of the west", but there is a discrepancy between this epitome of Varāha and his details, as Sindhu Sauvira is there assigned to the south-west along with Ānarta.—Ibid, p. 7.

<sup>5</sup> बीमबन्दिनगरविषयविजयतोष्यम्.—Hemacandra, op cit, v. 328, p. 147. This King Udāyana lived exercising the sovereignty over sixteen countries, beginning with Sindhu-Sauvira, three hundred and sixty-three cities, beginning with Vitabhaya.—"Meyer (J J), op cit, p. 97.

<sup>6</sup> Anahila Pattana, Virūval Pattana or Pattana, called also Northern Baroda in Gujarat, founded in Samvat 902 or A.D. 746, after the destruction of Valabhi by Banarāja or Vamśarāja. The town was called Anahilapattana, after the name of a cowherd who pointed out the site. Hemacandra the celebrated Jaina grammarian and lexicographer, flourished in the court of Kumārapāla, the king of Anahilapattana (A.D. 1142-1173), and was his spiritual guide. He died at the age of eighty-four in A.D. 1172, in which year Kumārapāla became a convert to Jainism, but according to other authorities, the conversion took place in A.D. 1159. After the overthrow of Vallabhi in the eighth century Anahilapattana became the chief city of Gujarat, or Western India, till the fifteenth century.—"Dev, op cit, p. 6.

<sup>7</sup> Jayasimhasūri, Kumārapāla Bhūpāla-Caritra Mahākāvya, Sarga IX, vv. 261, 265,

११

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Hemacandra, had been lying underground at Vitabhaya since the days of Udāyana<sup>1</sup>

This much about Sindhū-Sauvira-Deśa and its metropolis Vitabhaya About its ruler, Udāyana, there are not many data wherefrom to infer historically In the words of Dr Raychaudhuri "it is difficult to disentangle the kernel of historical truth from the husk of popular fables"<sup>2</sup>, but it must be admitted that there are a few facts about Udāyana which can be gleaned from the Jaina annals and which deserve some notice, howsoever little, on the part of historians According to these annals Udāyana of Sauvira-Deśa in an open fight defeated his dependent Canda Pradyota of Avantī,<sup>3</sup> who is an historical person, and about whom we shall see in detail in his relation as husband to Sīvā, the fourth daughter of Cataka Besides this we know that Udāyana was succeeded by his nephew Kesi, in whose reign Vitabhaya went to wreck and ruin<sup>4</sup> One cannot say if this is all a mere fiction or this is itself the reason why we have no traces of the history of this great part of the country, though we know on good authority that at one time it formed one of the "nine-Vargas" of Bhāratavarsha

About Udāyana's and his wife Prabhāvatī's attitude towards the religion of the Jinās we have ample proof, direct and otherwise, in the canonical literature of the Jainas, on which we can base our own inferences At one place Prabhāvatī, the Licchavi princess, having performed the worship of a Jaina image, says "The Arhat, who is free from love, hatred and delusion, who knows everything, who is endowed with the eight miraculous powers, who wears the form of the supreme god of gods, may he grant me a sight of himself"<sup>5</sup>

This shows with what respect the queen of Sauvira looked

<sup>1</sup> उदायने शिवगते । तदेव प्रतिमा । भविष्यति भूगता ॥ राहः कुमारपालस्य पुत्रेण । सत्यमानस्यले मन्त्रु प्रतिमाविर्भवति ॥—Hemacandra, op cit, vv 20, 22, 88, pp 158, 160

<sup>2</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 123 This war between the two, according to the legend, had taken place because Pradyota had run away with a servant girl and an image of Jina which belonged to Udāyana "Thereupon he sent a messenger to Pajjoja 'I care nothing for the servant girl Send me the image' He did not give it Udāyana hurriedly took the field together with the ten kings (his vassals) When Pajjoja descended he was bound (captured by Udāyana)"—Meyer (J J), op cit, pp 109-110 (cf Āvashyaka-Sūtra, p 299

<sup>3</sup> उदायनो राजा गत उज्जयिनीं प्रसीतो बन्धो—Ibid, pp 298-299 Cf Hemacandra, op cit, v 578, p 156

<sup>4</sup> तत्र यो से केसिकुमारं राया जाह —Bhagavati-Sūtra, sūt 491, p 619 "When he (Udāyana) died, a derty let a shower of dust fall Even to this day it lies buried"—Meyer (J J), op cit, pp 115-116

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, p 105

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

at the Jaina faith<sup>1</sup> Moreover, from the Uttarādhyayana and other canonical literature we know that the king too was no less a believer in the religion of the Jina,<sup>2</sup> though originally he was "devoted to Brahmanic ascetics"<sup>3</sup> He even went to the extent of renouncing the world,<sup>4</sup> and when the question of the succession of his son Abhu came before him he says to himself "If I renounce the world after appointing Prince Abhu to royal power, then Abhu will become infatuated with royal power and royal dominion down to the country and with the enjoyment of human pleasures and will stray to and fro in the beginningless, endless tanglewood of the Samsāra Therefore it is evidently better that I renounce the world after appointing my sister's son, Prince Kesi, to royal power"<sup>5</sup>

Thus the entire change in the heart of Udāyana is evident from this incident This has made his renunciation proverbial with the Jainas We find in the Antagada-Ḍasāo a passage referring to Udāyana—viz "Then King Alakkhe withdrew from the world in the same way as King Udāyane, save that he anointed his eldest son to rule over his kingdom"<sup>6</sup> It may be said here that in a note to this Dr Barnett has wrongly taken this passage to refer to Udāyana, "king of Kosambi and son of Sayānie (Sātānika) by Migāvai, daughter of Cedaga, king of Vaisālī"<sup>7</sup>

Furthermore, the treatment offered by Udāyana to the Avanti Pradyota, whom he had taken as a captive during the war, is illustrative of the fact that he strictly adhered to the 'precept that during the Paryushanāparvan even the most deadly enemy should be given up"<sup>8</sup> It so happened that on the occasion of the Paryushanāparvan, although Udāyana himself observed a fast he, notwithstanding, gave

<sup>1</sup> प्रभावता अना पुरे चेत्यहं कारिते, भक्तप्रवाख्यानेन मृता देयलोकां गता — Īśākyaka Sūtra p 298 (cf Meyer (J J) op and loc cit Hemacandra, op cit, v 404 p 150)

<sup>2</sup> Udāyana, the bull of kings of Sauvira, renounced the world and turned monk, he entered the order and reached perfection" — Jacobi, S B E, xlv, p 87 In a note to this Jacobi writes "He was contemporary with Mahāvira — Ibid

<sup>3</sup> Meyer (J J), op cit, p 103 स च तापसभक्त — Īśākyaka Sūtra, p 298, Hemacandra, op cit, v 388, p 140

<sup>4</sup> तस्य ते से उतायणे रावा समणस्स भगवसो जाव पण्डर — Bhagavati, sūt 492, p 620 Meyer (J J), op cit, p 114

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, pp 113 114 एव सत्तु जभीयीकुमारे कामभोगेसु मुन्दिर भाइसेज्ज केसि कुमारं रत्ते ठायेता — Bhagavati sūt 491, p 619

<sup>6</sup> Barnett, op cit, p 98

<sup>7</sup> Ibid, p 96, n 2

<sup>8</sup> Bhandardkar, Report for 1883 1884, p 142, Pajjūsana or Paryūshana, the sacred festival at the close of the Jaina year Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 76, पञ्चोत्सवियासो

कल्पियञ्च खनापियञ्च Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, sūt 50, pp 191 192

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

orders that Canda Pradyota be served with anything he liked. However the latter, from fear of being poisoned, did not wish to eat the food that was brought him, and said that he too had a fast to observe, being, as he was, of the same religion as Udāyana. This was reported to the king, and as a real Jaina he replied "I know that he is a rogue, but while he is a captive my Pajjusi va even does not become pure and auspicious" <sup>1</sup>

Coming next to Padmāvati we find that she was married to King Dadhivāhana of Campā,<sup>2</sup> once a great centre of Jainism.<sup>3</sup> Haribhadra, in his commentary on the Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, clearly states that both the king and queen were great adherents of the Jaina church. Considering the historical importance that Campā enjoys in the Jaina annals there is nothing strange if one assumes on the authority of the Jaina literature that the family of Dadhivāhana had a living interest in the Jaina doctrines.<sup>4</sup>

"Jaina tradition places him in the beginning of the sixth century B.C. His daughter Candanā or Candrabalā was the first female who embraced Jainism shortly after Mahāvīra had attained the Kevaliship."<sup>5</sup> Jaina narrative and other literature are full of references to this first female disciple of Mahāvīra. It was she who headed all the female lay and other worshippers of Vardhamāna in his own days.<sup>6</sup> The political significance connected with her life is that when "Śatānīka, king of Kausāmbi, attacked Campā, the capital of Dadhivāhana, Candanā fell into the hands of a robber, but all along she maintained the vows of the order."<sup>7</sup> This

<sup>1</sup> Cf Bhandarkar, op and loc cit, Meyer (J J), op cit, p 110-111, Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Ṭīkā, sūt 59, p 192. अद्य पदुषका, राजोपोषितः, न भयति-अहन्युपोषितः, मनापि मतापि नरी संयती, etc.—Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 300.

<sup>2</sup> दत्ता पद्मावती चम्पायां दधिवाहनाय—Ibid, pp 676, 677. Cf Meyer (J J), op cit, p 122.

<sup>3</sup> Cf Dey, op cit, p 44. Dey, J A S B (New Series), x, 1914, p 334.

<sup>4</sup> Haribhadra tells us that leaving the kingdom to their son Karakandū, both the king and the queen joined the order, पद्मावती दत्तो दन्तपुरे सार्याणां मूले प्रव्रजिता, द्वे अपि राज्ये दधिवाहनसत्सौ दत्ता प्रव्रजिते, करकन्दूमेहाशासनो जातः—Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, pp 716, 717, 718. It is further said that Karakandū also, like his father, finally joined the order. Cf ibid, p 719. For further reference about Karakandū and his parents see Meyer (J J), op cit, pp 122-136. Śāntyācārya, Uttārādhyayana-Siṣhyahitā, pp 300-303, Laxmi-Vallabha, Uttārādhyayana-Dīpikā, pp 254-259.

<sup>5</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 69. Cf Dey, op cit, p 321.

<sup>6</sup> समस्त भगवतो महावीरस्य सत्तच्छिष्याणामुक्ताया दत्तायां जनिता साहस्योऽपि दुष्टा—Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Ṭīkā, sūt 138, p 128. Cf Dev, op and loc cit.

<sup>7</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 69. Cf ibid, p 84. "Campā was occupied and destroyed by Śatānīka II, the king of Kausāmbi, a few years before Bimbisāra's annexation"—Pradhan, op cit, p 214.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

statement of Dr Raychaudhuri is based on the Jaina sources, and the whole story of Candanā in short runs as follows. During the war between her father and King Śatānika she was caught hold of by one of the enemy's army and was sold in Kauśāmbī to a banker named Dhanāvaha, who named her Candanā in spite of her already bearing the name Vasumatī as her family name. After a short time the banker's wife, Mūlā, felt jealous of her, and having cut her hair put her into custody. In this condition she once served a part of her food to Mahāvīra, and finally joined his ranks as a nun.<sup>1</sup>

Before we pass on to Mrgāvati, the third daughter of Cetaka, a few words about Campā in the light of Jaina history will not be out of place. The town of Campā seems to have been situated at a distance of a few miles in the neighbourhood of modern Bhagalpur, and is known to us under some such names as Campāpurī, Campānagar, Mālinī and Campā-Mālinī.<sup>2</sup> Its importance in Jaina history is self-evident when we know that Mahāvīra spent three of his rainy-seasons in Campā, the capital of Anga, and its suburbs (Prstha Campā), and that it is known to us as the place of both the birth and death of Vāsūpūjya, the twelfth Tīrthankara. Again, as the headquarters of Candanā and her father it is remembered by the Jains as a great centre of their religion. There are signs of old and new Jaina temples of both the Digambara and Śvetāmbara sects built for Vāsūpūjya and other Tīrthankaras as the chief Jinas.<sup>3</sup> The Uvāsaga-Ḍasāo and the Antagada-Ḍasāo mention that the temple called Caitya Punnabhadda existed at Campā at the time of Sudharman, one of the eleven disciples of Mahāvīra who succeeded as the head of the Jaina sect on his death.<sup>4</sup> "The town was visited by Sudharman, the head of the Jaina hierarchy, at the time of Kūnika or Ajātaśatru, who came barefooted to

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Ṭikā, sūti 118, pp. 106-107. Cf. Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, pp. 223-225, Hemacandra, op. cit., pp. 59-62. For further references about Candanā see Barnett, op. cit., pp. 98-100, 102, 106.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Dey, The Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India, p. 44, Cunningham, op. cit., pp. 546-547, 722-723. Now represented by the village of Champāpur on the Ganges, near Bhagalpur, anciently it was the capital of the country of Anga, corresponding to the modern district of Bhagalpur.

<sup>3</sup> Dey, op. cit., pp. 44-45. "From the inscriptions on some Jaina images exhumed from the neighbourhood of an old Jaina temple at Ajmer it appears that these images, which were of Bāsūpūjya, Mallinātha, Pārśvanātha and Vardhamāna, were dedicated in the thirteenth century A.D.—i.e. ranging from Samvat 1239-1247"—Ibid., p. 45. Cf. J.A.S.B., vii, p. 52.

<sup>4</sup> Hoernle, op. cit., II, p. 2, notes. "Verily, Jambū, in those days there was a city named Campā, a sanctuary Punnabhadda."—Barnett, op. cit., pp. 97-98, 100. Cf. Dey, op. cit. and loc. cit.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

see the Ganadhara outside the city where he had taken up his abode Sudharman's successor Jambū and Jambū's successor Prabhava also visited Campā, and Prabhava's successor, Sayambhava, lived at this city, where he composed the Daśavakāhika-Sūtra, containing in ten lectures all the essence of the sacred doctrines of Jainism " <sup>1</sup>

"After the death of Bimbisāra, Kūnika or Ajātasatru made Campā his capital, but after his death his son Udāyin transferred the seat of Government to Pātaliputra <sup>2</sup> From the Campaka-Sreshthi-Kathā, a Jaina work, it appears that the town was in a very flourishing condition In the opening lines the castes and the trades of the town are enumerated There were perfumers, spice-sellers, sugar-candy sellers, jewellers, leather-tanners, garland-makers, carpenters, goldsmiths, weavers, washermen," etc <sup>3</sup>

Coming to Mrgāvati, the third daughter of Cetaka, we find that she was married to King Śātānika <sup>4</sup> of Kausāmbi <sup>5</sup> and was known also as the princess of Videha <sup>6</sup> "V.nayaviṇyaganin, in his Subodhikā commentary to the Kalpa-Sūtra, draws from old Jaina sources, and says that when Mahāvira visited the town of Kausāmbi the king of that place was Śātānika and the queen was Mrgāvati " <sup>7</sup> That both the king and the queen were devotees of Mahāvira can be well established from the Jaina literature itself Looking to the family atmosphere in which she was brought up it is natural that Mrgāvati could not be anything else than a Jaina <sup>8</sup> Furthermore, the Jaina tradition tells us in particular that the king's Amūtya (minister) and his wife also were Jainas by faith <sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Dey, op and loc cit जन्मदा श्रीगणधरः सुधर्मा । जगतां चरन्त्या ॥ तदा कृषिणः । वक्रपादुको । सुधर्मेस्त्वामिन् दृष्ट्वा दूरादपि मनोऽकरोत् ॥ —Hemacandra, Pratishṭhaparvan, Canto IV, vv 1, 9, 23, 35

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, Canto VI, vv 21 ff

<sup>3</sup> Dey, op and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Śātānika himself was styled also Parantapa Cf Rhys Davids, op cit, p 8

<sup>5</sup> "Kausāmbi, Kausāmbi-nagar or Koāam, an old village on the left bank of the Jamuna, about 80 miles to the west of Allahabad"—Dey, op cit, p 96

<sup>6</sup> "Śātānika married a princess of Videha, as his son is called Videhiputra"—Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 84 Cf Law (B C), op cit, p 136

<sup>7</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p 257 तत्र ज्ञेयः श्रीशम्भो गतस्तत्र ज्ञातानीको राजा मृगावती देवी. —Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā, sūti 118, p 106

<sup>8</sup> Mahāvira had been to Kausāmbi during the years of his wanderings before he was endowed with Kevala-Jñāna It so happened that during his stay there Lord Mahāvira, owing to some vow that he had taken, did not accept any food for some days, and hence मृगावत्यपि महता दुःखेनाभिभूता तेन (राज्ञा) आश्वासिता - तथा करिष्यामि यथा कल्पे लभते

—Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 228 Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 40

<sup>9</sup> सुगुप्तोन्मादो, नन्दा तस्य भार्या, सा च अमखोपासिका, सा च आह्वीति मृगावत्या वयस्या, जनालोचनं सपत्निकं ज्ञातम्. स्वामिन् वन्दते. —Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, pp 222, 223 Cf Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, sūti 118, p 106

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

About Śatānika's fight with Dadhivāhana we have already referred. The other fact of historical importance that we can get from the Jaina literature is this, that "his son and successor was the famous Udāyana, the contemporary of Bimbisāra" <sup>1</sup> "Again, the grandfather of Udāyana," observes Dr Pradhan, "is named Sahasrānika by Bhāsa, and Vasudāman by the Purānas. Sahasrānika was a contemporary of Bimbisāra and received religious instructions from Mahāvira. The Jainas call him Sasānika, which is evidently a softening of 'Sahasānika,' the Prākṛt equivalent of the Sanskrit from 'Sahasrānika.' Sasānika was probably the same as the Purānic Vasudāman and had his son Śatānika II. Udāyana was the son of Śatānika II" <sup>2</sup>

In this the learned doctor is fully authorised by the Bhagavati-Sūtra, the fifth Anga of the Jainas <sup>3</sup>. We know further that Śatānika's sister Jayantī was a staunch follower of Mahāvira <sup>4</sup>. About Udāyana we shall speak at length a little later along with his father-in-law, Canda Pradyota, and his successors, but at present we need say this much only that by the Jainas he is claimed to have been a Jaina, and that "he was a great king who really made some conquests, and contracted matrimonial alliances with the royal houses of Avantī, Anga and Magadha" <sup>5</sup>.

Taking Śivā, the fourth daughter of Cetaka, we find that she was married to Canda Pradyota of Ujjaini, <sup>6</sup> the capital of Avantī or ancient Malwa <sup>7</sup>. He is known to us as Canda Pradyota Mahāsena—fierce Pradyota, the possessor of a great army, <sup>8</sup> and as the father-in-law of Udāyana of Kauśāmbi, the capital of the country of Vamsa or Vatsa <sup>9</sup>. "The king of Avantī in the Buddha's time,"

<sup>1</sup> Raychaudhuri, op and loc cit. Cf Barnett, op cit, p 96, n 2

<sup>2</sup> Pradhan, op and loc cit. "The Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara says that Śatānika's son Sahasrānika was the father of Udāyana. Thus the Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara reverses the order certainly wrongly"—Ibid. Cf Tawney (ed Penzer), Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara, 1, pp 95-96, Raychaudhuri op and loc cit.

<sup>3</sup> सहस्राणीयस्स रत्तो पोत्ते सयाणीयस्स रत्तो पुत्ते वेडगस्स रत्तो नज्जुर मिगावतीए देवीए जज्जर जयन्तीए समखोवासियाए भत्तिज्जर उदायणे नाम राया होत्था, etc.—Bhagavati, sūt 441, p 556

<sup>4</sup> तए खं सा जयन्ती समखोवासिया पञ्चदश नाव सज्जदुक्खप्पहोया । —Ibid, sūt 443, p 558

<sup>5</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p 123

<sup>6</sup> Cf Avastya-Sūtra, p 677

<sup>7</sup> Cf Dey, op cit, p 200

<sup>8</sup> Cf Pradhan, op cit, p 230

<sup>9</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri op cit, p 83. "Kosāmbi-Nagar or Kosām was the capital of Vamsadeśa or Vatsvadeśa, the kingdom of Udāyana"—Dey, op cit, p 96

Cf ibid, p 28

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

observes Dr Rhys Davids, "was Pajjota the Fierce, who reigned at the capital Ujjeni. There is a legend about him which shows that he and his neighbour, King Udena of Kośāmbi, were believed to have been contemporary, connected by marriage, and engaged in war"<sup>1</sup>. This "legend" is fully corroborated by Jaina sources. We know from these sources that the Vatsa king, Udāyana, was married to Vāsavadattā,<sup>2</sup> the daughter of the Pradyota of Avantī.<sup>3</sup> Furthermore, to state in brief, Hemacandra tells us that Canda Pradyota had asked Queen Mrgāvati from Satānika, and on the refusal of the latter he had declared a war against him. It so happened that in the meantime Satānika died, and when Mahāvira came down to Kauśāmbi Canda Pradyota was induced to give up his feeling of revenge and to allow Mrgāvati to become a nun, with a promise to make Udāyana the king of Kauśāmbi.<sup>4</sup>

This Udāyana, "the king of Vatsa, is the central figure in a large cycle of Sanskrit stories of love and adventure, and in these Pradyota, the king of Ujjain, the father of the peerless Vāsavadattā, plays no small part"<sup>5</sup>. As just remarked, he is said to have contracted matrimonial alliances with the royal houses of Avantī, Anga and Magadha. From different sources, whether fully reliable or not, we know that Vāsuladattā or Vāsavadattā, the daughter of Pradyota, king of Avantī, Padmāvati, the sister of Darśaka, the king of Magadha, and the daughter of Drdhavarman, the king of Anga, were his queens.<sup>6</sup> Of these Vāsavadattā was the chief queen of Udāyana. Both Buddhist and Jaina literatures "give a long and romantic story of the way in which Vāsuladattā, the daughter of Pajjota of Avantī, became the wife, or rather one of the three wives, of King Udena of Kośāmbi"<sup>7</sup>. As to his attitude towards religion Udāyana had before him his mother, and also relatives like

<sup>1</sup> Rhys Davids, CHI, 1, p. 185.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Āvāṣyaka-Sūtra, p. 674, Hemacandra, Trishashṭi-Salākā, Parva X, pp. 142-145.

<sup>3</sup> "Avantī roughly corresponds to modern Mālwā, Nimār and the adjoining parts of the central provinces. Prof Bhandarkar points out that this Janapada was divided into two parts: the northern part had its capital at Ujjain, and the southern part, called Avantī Dakṣiṇāpāṭha, had its capital at Mahāssati or Mahāśmatī, usually identified with the modern Māndhātā on the Narmada"—Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 92.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Hemacandra, op cit, v. 232, p. 107.

<sup>5</sup> Rapson, CHI, 1, p. 311. Cf. Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 122. Pargiter, Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, p. 285.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Raychaudhuri, op and loc cit, Pradhan, op cit, pp. 212, 246. "Tradition has preserved a long story of adventures of Udena and his three wives"—Rhys Davids, op cit, p. 187.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p. 4, Āvāṣyaka-Sūtra, p. 674, Hemacandra, op cit, pp. 142-145.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Bimbisāra, Cellanā and others, who were more or less the leading figures of the Jaina community of those days, and this naturally created in him respect and sympathy for the Jaina church.<sup>1</sup>

About the Avantī-Pradyota and his Queen Sīvā's sentiments for the Jaina church Hemacandra tells us that he had his distinct sympathies for the Jaina faith, and that it was with his permission that his eight queens, Angāravati and others, along with Mrgāvati of Kauśāmbi, joined the order.<sup>2</sup> In his connection with Udāyana of Sauvira we have already seen that Pradyota himself had declared that he also was traditionally a Jaina himself. No doubt the fierce and unscrupulous character of the lord of Avantī is known both to the Bauddhas and the Jainas,<sup>3</sup> but in this particular incident one cannot see for what earthly reason he should have falsely represented himself to be a Jaina. If he had his own suspicion he could as well have refused the food on some other ground than this. Whether a fact or a fiction, one thing is certain—that the moral of this particular incident is to show something else than the evil nature of this or that king. The leading idea is that though a great enemy of Pradyota as Udāyana was, he did not like to see a captive before him, whether a Jaina or not, during the days of his religious festival.<sup>4</sup>

Thus out of the seven daughters of Cetaka, Prabhāvati, Padmāvati, Mrgāvati, Sīvā and Cellanā were married respectively to the lords of Sauvira, Anga, Vatsa (Vamśa), Avantī and Magadha. Of these the last four are included both in the Buddhist and the Jaina lists of the Sixteen Mahājanapadas,<sup>5</sup> while nothing more can be said about the Sauvira-Deśa. Of the remaining two daughters of Cetaka, Jyeshthā was married to Nandivardhana, brother of Lord Mahāvira and ruler of Kundagrāma,<sup>6</sup> while Sujyeshthā joined

<sup>1</sup> सानी कनोसु । तत्र ये से उदायसे राया पञ्चुवासर । etc.—Bhagavati, sūt 442, p. 556

<sup>2</sup> सहायककुमारनाम द्रव्यां खानिसिधौ ।
अहायकारनाम । प्रसोतनुपते । प्रिया. ॥

—Hemacandra, op cit, v 233, p. 107

<sup>3</sup> Cf Rhys Davids, op and loc cit, सो पुत्रो —Āvaśyaka Sūtra p. 300, Bhandarkar, op and loc cit, पूर्वसाधनेति —Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, sūt 59, p. 192

<sup>4</sup> Cf Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p. 300, Meyer (J J), op cit, pp. 110-111, Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, sūt 59, p. 192

<sup>5</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 59-60

<sup>6</sup> Cf Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p. 677, Hemacandra, op cit, v. 192, p. 77

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

the order of Mahāvira's disciples<sup>1</sup> All these facts combined go a long way to show how far Vardhamāna's influence reached through his mother Trisālā, the Licchavi princess. It is clear from this that at the time Mahāvira lived and preached, the Licchavis were recognised as Kshatriyas, who held their heads very high on account of their high birth and with whom the highest born princes of Eastern India considered it an honour to enter into matrimonial alliance

In short, it was through the Licchavis, and thereby through the ruling dynasty of Vaiśālī, that the reformed church of Mahāvira got a solid support from all directions in its early days.<sup>2</sup> It was through them that the religion of Mahāvira had spread over Sauvira, Anga, Vatsa, Avantī, Videha and Magadha, all of which were the most powerful kingdoms of the time This is why the Buddhist works do not mention Cetaka, the king of Vaiśālī, though they tell us about the constitutional government of Vesālī<sup>3</sup> To quote Dr Jacobi, "Buddhists took no notice of him, as his influence . . . was used in the interest of their rivals But the Jainas cherished the memory of the maternal uncle and patron of their prophet, to whose influence we must attribute the fact that Vaiśālī used to be a stronghold of Jainism, while being looked upon by the Buddhists as a seminary of heresies and dissent"<sup>4</sup>

In addition to these there are other stray references to the Licchavis in the Jaina Sūtras which more or less confirm the fact that they were nothing short of Jainas themselves Taking first the Sūtrakṛtāṅga we find that they were highly respected by the Jainas According to it, "A Brāhmaṇa or Kshattriya by birth, a scion of the Ugra race or a Licchavi, who enters the order eating alms given by others is not stuck up on account of his renowned Gotra"<sup>5</sup>

Citing next the Kalpa-Sūtra · "In that night in which the Venerable Ascetic Mahāvira died, freed from all pains, the eighteen confederate kings of Kāśī and Kosala, the nine Mallakis and nine Licchavis, on the day of new moon, instituted an illumination"<sup>6</sup> on

<sup>1</sup> Cf Āvadyaka-Sūtra, p 685, Hemacandra, op cit, v 266, p 80

<sup>2</sup> Cf Dey, Notes on Ancient Anga, p 322, Bühler, Indian Sect of the Jainas, p 27

<sup>3</sup> Cf Jacobi, SBE, xxi, Int, p xii See Turnour, J A.S.B, vii, p 992

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, op cit, Int, p xii

<sup>5</sup> Jacobi, SBE, xiv, p 321

<sup>6</sup> "The Jainas celebrate the Nirodha of Mahāvira with an illumination on the night of new moon in the month Kārttika"—Ibid, xxi, p 266

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the . . . fasting day; for they said 'Since the light of intelligence is gone, let us make an illumination of material matter!'"<sup>1</sup>

Besides these two quotations from the Jaina Sūtras there is something about a king, Jiyasattū, in the Uvāsaga-Dasāo which, if taken in the light of the interpretation of Dr Hoernle, is of the utmost importance when we are examining the relations that existed between Cetaka, the Licchavi king, and the Jains. In the first of the ten lectures of this seventh Anga of the Jains we find in the reply of Sudharma<sup>2</sup> to the question of Jambū what was the purport of it—viz.

"Truly, Jambū, at that time and at that period, there was a city called Vāṇiyagāma. Outside of the city of Vāṇiyagāma, in a north-easterly direction, there was a Ceīya called Dūpalāsa. At that time Jiyasattū was king over the city of Vāṇiyagāma. There also lived then in Vāṇiyagāma a householder called Ānanda,<sup>3</sup> who was prosperous and without any equals.

"At that time and at that period, the Samana, the blessed Mahāvira arrived on a visit, and a company of people went out to hear him. Then King Jiyasattū also went out to hear him, just as King Kūṇiya had done on another occasion, and having done so . . . he stood waiting on him."<sup>4</sup>

The Jiyasattū mentioned here has rightly been identified by both Drs Hoernle and Barnett<sup>5</sup> with Cetaka or Cedaga, the maternal uncle of Mahāvira, because Vāṇiyagāma, the city of Jiyasattū, was, as we shall see later on, either another name of Vaiśālī or some portion of it which was so called. To quote Dr Hoernle "In the Sūryaprajñāpati Jiyasattū is mentioned as ruling over Mithila, the capital of the Videha country. Here he is mentioned as ruling over Vāṇiyagāma or Vesālī. On the other hand Cedaga, the maternal uncle of Mahāvira, is said to have been a king of Vesālī and Videha. It would seem that Jiyasattū and Cedaga were the same persons."<sup>6</sup> Furthermore, the King

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, S B E, xxii, p. 266

<sup>2</sup> "one of the eleven disciples (Ganadhara) of Mahāvira, who succeeded him as head of the Jaina sect, being himself succeeded by Jambū, the last of the so-called Kevīl." Hoernle, op cit, p. 2, n. 5

<sup>3</sup> Ānanda is known to the Jains as a typical example of a faithful lay-adherent of Jainism. Cf. Hemacandra, Yoga Śāstra, chap. iii, . . . 151, Hoernle, op cit, pp. 7 ff.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, pp. 8-7, 9

<sup>5</sup> Barnett, op cit, Int., p. vi. For further references to Jiyasattū in the eighth and the ninth Angas of the Jains see ibid, pp. 62, 113

<sup>6</sup> Hoernle, op cit, p. 6, n. 9.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Kūṇiya, with whom Jiyasattū is compared here, is none else but Ajātaśatru, the son and successor of Bumbisāra of Magadha. The comparison is quite appropriate when we know that Kūṇiya, like his father, was a great Jaina. Whether or not this was the state of things throughout his career we shall examine later on, but this much is certain, that he had his distinct sympathies for the Jaina church<sup>1</sup> and must have more than once come into personal touch with Lord Mahāvira.

We have already seen that this Kūṇiya or Kūnika had an occasion for an open fight with his grandfather, Cedaga, for an elephant with which his younger brother had run away to Vaiśālī. It appears from this that by way of rivalry with Ajātasattū (Ajātaśatru) Cedaga was called also Jiyasattū. Once again, to cite Dr Hoernle, "the name of Jiyasattū (Skr Jitaśatru) he may have received, as has been suggested, by way of rivalry with Ajātasattū (Skr Ajātaśatru), king of Magadha, who at first was also a patron of Mahāvira, though afterwards he exchanged him for Buddha. To the Jainas Ajātasattū is known under the name of Kūṇiya, and under that name he is compared with Jiyasattū here and elsewhere"<sup>2</sup>.

From all these traditions connected with the Licchavis Kshatriyas it is highly probable that, like the Videhans, they were also Jainas themselves.<sup>3</sup> If this is granted, the great and powerful dynasty of the Licchavis was really a valuable source of strength to the reformed church of Mahāvira. Their very capital formed the headquarters of the Jaina community during the days of Mahāvira. From the Jaina literature itself we know that Mahāvira was very closely connected with the metropolis of the Licchavis. Vaiśālī claims the last prophet of the Jainas as its own citizen. The Sūtrakṛtāṅga says about Mahāvira as follows: "Thus spoke the Arhat Jñātriputra, the reverend, famous native of Vaiśālī, who possessed the highest knowledge and the highest faith, who possessed (simultaneously) the highest knowledge and faith."<sup>4</sup> "This passage is also repeated in another Jaina work, the Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, with a slight variation<sup>5</sup>. Mahāvira is spoken of as Vesali or

<sup>1</sup> तदं शं से कृषिद राया . . समस्तं भगवं महावीरं वेदति समस्तानि — Aupapādhika-Sūtra 82, p. 75

<sup>2</sup> Hoernle, op. cit. and loc. cit.

<sup>3</sup> For further facts about the strength of Jainism in Vaiśālī see Law (B. C.), op. cit., pp. 72-75. Jacobi, op. cit., p. 194.

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, S. B. E., xlv, p. 261.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Lecture VI, v. 17, Jacobi, op. cit., p. 27.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Vaisālika—i.e. a native of Vaiśālī. Moreover Abhayadeva, in his commentary on the Bhagavati, 2, I 12, 2, explains Vaisālika by Mahāvira, and speaks of Vaiśālī as Mahāvīrajananī or 'the mother of Mahāvira.'"<sup>1</sup> In addition to this we know from the Kalpa-Sūtra that out of the forty-two rainy-seasons which he spent as a missionary during his later ascetic life Mahāvira did not neglect the city of his birth, but passed no less than twelve years at Vaiśālī.<sup>2</sup>

Furthermore, the importance of this close relation between the last Tirthankara of the Jainas and the Licchavis is greatly enhanced when we know from different sources that Vaiśālī, the capital of the Licchavis, was under a powerful dynasty which wielded considerable influence in both the political and social circles of its time. "Vaiśālī," observes Dr Law, "'the large city' par excellence, is renowned in Indian history as the capital of the Licchavi Rājās and the headquarters of the great and powerful Vajjian confederacy. This great city is intimately associated with the early history of both Jainism and Buddhism, it carries with itself the sacred memories of the founders of these two great faiths that evolved in north-eastern India five hundred years before the birth of Christ."<sup>3</sup>

One thing still remains to be considered, and that is about the relations that existed between Vaiśālī and Kundagāma.<sup>4</sup> Considering the fact that Vaiśālī was the most flourishing town in India about five hundred years before the beginning of our era, one thing is certain—that Kundagāma, as has been already remarked, must have been a division of Vaiśālī. Taking both the Buddhist and the Jaina traditions, scholars like Hoernle,<sup>5</sup> Rockhill<sup>6</sup> and others agree to the fact that Vaiśālī was divided into three districts—namely, those of "Vesālī proper, Kundapura, and Vāṇiyagāma—occupying respectively the south-eastern, north-eastern and western portions

<sup>1</sup> Law (B C), op cit, pp 81-82

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, SBE, xxi, p 264. Cf Law (B C), op cit, pp 82-83

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p 81. "This was the capital of the Licchavi clan, already closely related by marriage to the kings of Magadha. It was the headquarters of the powerful Vajjian confederacy. It was the only great city in all the territories of the free clans who formed so important a factor in the social and political life of the sixth century B.C. It must have been a great flourishing place"—Rhys Davids, op cit, pp 40-41, Charpentier, CHI, i, p 157

<sup>4</sup> "Under the name of Kundagāma the city of Vaiśālī is mentioned as the birthplace of Mahāvira, the Jaina Tirthankara, who was also called Vesahe or the man of Vesālī. It is the Koṭṭagāma of the Buddhists"—Dey, The Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India, p 107

<sup>5</sup> Hoernle, op cit, pp 3-7

<sup>6</sup> Rockhill, The Life of Buddha, pp 62-63

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

of the area of the total city"<sup>1</sup> Moreover the fact that all three districts were closely connected with Vaiśālī is clear from the tradition that Mahāvīra was known as a native of Vaiśālī though he was born at Kundagrāma, and that the twelve rainy-seasons spent by Mahāvīra at Vaiśālī are put down in the Kalpa-Sūtra as follows. "Twelve in Vaiśālī and Vāṇiyagrāma"<sup>2</sup> Both Hoernle and Nundo Lal Dey go a step farther than this and identify them at the outset with Vaiśālī, holding that the ancient town of Vaiśālī was known also as Kundapura or Vāṇiyagrāma, but finally they nevertheless agree to the fact that both of them were separate divisions of Vaiśālī, the state of the Licchavis<sup>3</sup>

Thus this much is certain, that Kundagrāma formed one of the three chief divisions of Vaiśālī, the government of which seems to have resembled that of a Greek state. The peculiar form of government, the free institutions, the manners and customs, and the religious views and practices of the time afford us glimpses of transitional India wherein the ancient Vedic culture was making a fresh development and undergoing a novel transformation under the influence of that speculative activity out of which emerged a new socio-religious order of things

"It was," says Dr Hoernle, "an oligarchic republic; its

<sup>1</sup> Hoernle, op cit, p 4 Cf Law (B C), op cit, p 88, Dey, op cit, p 17 It may be mentioned here that in the Uvśaga-Dasdo there is something in connection with Vāṇiyagāma to the following effect वाणिज्यामे नवरे उच्चनीचमिहमाई कुलाई ("At the city of Vāṇiyagāma, to the upper, lower and middle classes")—Hoernle, op cit, i, p 36 Curiously enough this agrees with the description of Vaiśālī given in the Dulca—Rockhill, op cit, p 62 "There were three districts in Vesālī In the first district were 7000 houses with golden towers, and in the middle district were 14,000 houses with silver towers, and in the last district were 21,000 houses with copper towers, in these lived the upper, the middle, and the lower classes according to their positions"—Cf Hoernle, op cit, ii, p 6, n 8 Dey has taken the three districts or quarters, "Vaiśālī proper (Besarh), Kundapura (Basukunda), and Vāṇiyagāmā (Bania)" as "inhabited by the Brahman, Kshatriya and Baniā castes respectively"—Dey, op cit, p 107

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, op cit, p 264

<sup>3</sup> "Vāṇiyagāmā, Skr Vāṇiyagrāma, another name of the well-known city of Vesālī (Skr Vaishālī), the capital of the Licchavi country In the Kalpa-Sūtra it is mentioned separately, but in close connection with Vaiśālī The fact is, that the city commonly called Vesālī occupied a very extended area, which included within its circuit besides Vesālī proper (now Besarh), several other places Among the latter were Vāṇiyagāma and Kundagāma or Kundapura These still exist as villages under the names of Baniya and Basukunda Hence the joint city might be called, according to circumstances, by any of the names of its constituent parts"—Hoernle, op cit, ii, pp 3-4 "Bāṇiyagāmā—Vaiśālī or (Besāḍ) in the district of Mozaffarpur (Tirhut), in fact, Bāṇiyagāmā was a portion of the ancient town of Vaiśālī, Kundagāmā—it is another name for Vaiśālī (modern Besarh) in the district of Mozaffarpur (Tirhut), in fact, Kundagāmā (Kundagrāma), now called Basukunda, was a part of the suburb of the ancient town of Vaiśālī"—Dey, op cit, pp 28, 107

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

government was vested in a senate composed of the heads of the resident Kshatriya clans, and presided over by an officer who had the title of king, and was assisted by a viceroy and a commander-in-chief" <sup>1</sup> "The most important amongst the republics were the Vajjians of Vaiśālī and the Mallas of Kusinārā (Kusinagara) and Pāvā. As in Rome, so in Videha the overthrow of the monarchy was followed by the rise of a republic—the Vijiian confederacy" <sup>2</sup> Thus the monarchies of a former age were succeeded by aristocratic republics like that of Vaiśālī with the heads of the Kshatriya clans of Kundagāmā and at other places. Looking at the great power that the Śaśunāgas were wielding—in the political atmosphere of the country—such republic had doubtless a very short existence.

To quote Dr Law, "From the account of their political institutions that can be gleaned from the Pāli Buddhist canon we get an insight into the democratic ideas of statecraft and government that prevailed among the majority of the Āryan clans that peopled northern India before the imperialistic policy of the Mauryas grew and developed, as we have it on the authority of the great Brahman statesman whose policy and activity were responsible, in no little measure, for the foundation of the Maurya Empire" <sup>3</sup> For our purpose suffice it to say that Siddhārtha, as the head of the Nāta or Nāya clan, must have obtained some eminence in senate and state, which is amply borne out eventually by his marriage with Trisālā, the sister of this republican king <sup>4</sup>

Taking next the Jñātrikas <sup>5</sup> we find that they formed the clan which gave India one of its greatest religious reformers. Their importance as a Kshatriya tribe is self-evident when we already know that they formed one of the most important clans of the "Confederacy of the Vṛjis or of the Licchavis." They "were the clan of Siddhārtha and his son Mahāvīra the Jina. They had their seats at Kundapura or Kundagrāma and Kollāga, <sup>6</sup> suburbs of

<sup>1</sup> Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 22, Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp 75-76

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, pp 52, 116 Cf Thomas (F W), CHI, 1, p 491

<sup>3</sup> Law (B C), op cit, pp 1-2

<sup>4</sup> Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 22, Jacobi, op cit, Int, p xii

<sup>5</sup> The name of the clan is also given as the Nāya or Nātha clan Cf Law (B C) op cit, p 121, Hoernle, op cit, p 4, n

<sup>6</sup> The Udsaga-Dasdo says about Kollāga to the following effect "Outside of the city of Vānīyagāmā, in a north easterly direction, there was a suburb called Kollāga, which was large, strong palatial, etc"—Hoernle, op cit, p 8 Cf ibid, p 4, n "A suburb of Vaiśālī (Besar) in the district of Mozaffarpur (Tirhut) in which the Nāya-Kula Kshatriyas resided Mahāvīra, the Jaina Tirthankara, belonged to this class of Kshatriyas"—Dey, op cit, p 102

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Vesālī Nevertheless they were known as 'Vesaliē'—i.e. inhabitants of Vesālī " <sup>1</sup>

Mahāvīra, the son of Siddhārtha and Trisālā, is undoubtedly the most noble scion of the Jñātrika clan. A sidelight on the tremendous influence exercised by this remarkable man on his fellow-men is thrown by a passage occurring in the canonical literature of his bitter antagonists, the Buddhists. The passage may be translated thus: "He is the head of an order, of a following, the teacher of a school, well known and of repute as a sophist, revered by the people, a man of experience, who has long been a recluse, old and well stricken in years" <sup>2</sup>

We have already seen that Mahāvīra and his parents were the followers of the tenets of Pārśva, and hence with them it is highly probable that the whole clan of the Nāya Kshatriyas were also the followers of the same tenets. The Nāya clan seems to have supported a body of monks who followed the predecessor of Mahāvīra, and lastly, when he appeared, the members of his clan became his devoted followers <sup>3</sup>. The Sūtrakṛtāṅga tells us that those who followed the law proclaimed by Mahāvīra were "virtuous and righteous" and that they "confirmed each other in the law" <sup>4</sup>.

Thus the Jñātrikas, being of the clan of Mahāvīra, naturally were greatly affected by the doctrines of Nātaputta. The Jaina Sūtras give an idealised picture of the Jñātrikas, and tell us that they avoided what was sinful and were afraid of sin <sup>5</sup>. For instance the Sūtrakṛtāṅga observes:

"In compassion to all beings, the seers, the Jñātriputras, avoid what is sinful, afraid of it, they abstain from food especially prepared for them. They abstain from wicked deeds, afraid of injuring living beings, and do no harm to any creature; therefore they do not partake of such food. This is a maxim of the monks of our creed" <sup>6</sup>.

From the Uvāsaga-Dasāo we come to know that the Jñātrikas possessed a Jaina temple outside their settlement at Kollāga, which bore the name of Dūpalāsa <sup>7</sup>. The term Ceyya used here has been

<sup>1</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 74. Cf Barnett, op cit, Int, p vi, Hoernle, op. and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Law (B C), op cit, pp 124-125

<sup>3</sup> Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 81, Law (B C), op cit, p 128

<sup>4</sup> Cf Jacobi, S.B.E., xlv, p 256

<sup>5</sup> Cf Law (B C), op cit, p 122

<sup>6</sup> Jacobi, op cit, p 416. Dr Jacobi makes a note here that the term Jñātriputras is used as the synonym for the Jainas. Cf ibid

<sup>7</sup> Cf Hoernle, op cit, i, p 2

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

interpreted by Dr Hoernle to mean "properly the name of a Jama temple or sacred shrine, but commonly applied to the whole sacred enclosure containing a garden, grove or park (Ujjaana, Vana-Sanda or Vana-Khanda), a shrine and attendants' houses" <sup>1</sup> This interpretation of the term Ceyya is quite appropriate, since, of course, the Jñātrikas as the followers of the religion of Pārśva ought to keep up a religious establishment for the accommodation of Mahāvīra on his periodical visits, with his disciples, to Kunda-pura or Vāsālī. This becomes more of a certainty when we are informed that after Mahāvīra's assuming the vocation of a monk he used this Ceyya for his accommodation whenever he visited the place of his birth <sup>2</sup>

This much about the Jñātrikas and their attitude towards the religion propounded by one who was an ornament of their clan. "We may however, mention the fact," observes Dr Law, "that it was he who brought the Jñātrikas into intimate touch with the neighbouring communities of Eastern India and developed a religion which is still professed by millions of Indians. Another celebrity of the Jñātrika clan was Ānanda, a staunch follower of Mahāvīra. The Jaina work, Uvāsaga-Ḍasāo, mentions that he had with him a treasure of four Kror measures of gold deposited in a safe place. Again he is represented as a person whom many kings, princes and their dignitaries down to merchants found it necessary to consult on many matters requiring advice. He had a devoted wife, named Sivanandā" <sup>3</sup>

Taking next the Vajjis we find it very difficult to differentiate between them and the Licchavis. They "are often associated with the city of Vāsālī, which was not only the capital of the Licchavi clan, but also the metropolis of the entire confederacy" <sup>4</sup> According to Dr Law "the Licchavis, or, to call them by their wider designation, the Vajjians, appear to have been imbued with a strong religious spirit and deep devotion. After Mahāvīra developed his doctrines and preached his faith of unbounded charity to all living beings in the Vajji land and in Magadha, the number of his followers among the Licchavis appears to have been large,

<sup>1</sup> Hoernle, op cit, II, p. 2, n. 4

<sup>2</sup> Cf. ibid, I, p. 6, II, p. 9. In the Kalpa Sūtra we do not get the Ceyya named Dūpalāsa, but the park of the Sandavana of the Nāya clan—Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā-ṭīkā, sū. 115, p. 95. Cf. Jacobi, SBE XXII, p. 257, Hoernle, op cit, pp. 4-5. Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p. 31.

<sup>3</sup> Law (B. C.), op cit, p. 125. Cf. Hoernle, op cit, pp. 7-9.

<sup>4</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp. 74-75.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

and some men of the highest position in Vesālī appear to have been among them, as is seen from the Buddhist books themselves ”<sup>1</sup>

Thus we have seen to what extent the Videhans, the Licchavis, the Jñātrikas and the Vajjis were connected with the Jaina church. It seems that the Vajjian or the Licchavi confederacy as a whole was a great source of strength to the reformed church of Mahāvira. Taking next the Mallakins we find that they too had imbibed a feeling in them of respect and sympathy for the great prophet and his doctrines.

The country of the Mallas is spoken of as one of the sixteen “great countries” (Mahājanapadas), and it is agreed to by both the Buddhists and the Jainas<sup>2</sup>. At the time of Mahāvira they appear to have been divided into two confederacies—one with its capital at Pāvā, and the other at Kusinārā<sup>3</sup>. Both the capitals are situated at a short distance from each other, and are known to the Jainas and Bauddhas as sacred places where their prophets reached their final liberation. We have already seen that Mahāvira died here “while he was dwelling in the house of the scribe of King Hastipāla or, according to Stevenson’s Kalpa-Sūtra, while he was spending the Paryushana (Paryusana) at the palace of Shastipāla, King of Pāvā. There are four beautiful Jaina temples in an enclosure which marks the site of his death ”<sup>4</sup>.

The connections of the Jainas with the Mallas, though not as good as those with the Licchavis, seem to be good enough to get them their support for the progress of their church. According to Dr Law we get ample proof for this even from the Buddhist literature. “Jainism,” observes the learned scholar, “found many followers among the Mallas as among many other races of Eastern India. The accounts we get in the Buddhist literature of the schism that appeared in the Jaina church after the death of Mahāvira amply

<sup>1</sup> Law (B C), op cit, pp 67, 73

<sup>2</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp 59-60

<sup>3</sup> Cf Law (B C), op cit, p 147, Raychaudhuri, op cit p 79, Rhys Davids, CH I, 1, p 175. “Pāvā is a corruption of Apāpapurī. Pāvā or Pāvā has been wrongly identified by General Cunningham with Padroana, which is the modern name of ancient Pāvā, where Buddha ate food at the house of Uṇḍa. Pāvāpurī is the modern name of the ancient Pāvā or Apāpapurī, seven miles to the east of Bihar town, where Mahāvira, the Jaina Tīrthankara, died”—Dey op cit, pp 148, 155. Kusinārā or Kusinagara is the place where Buddha died in 477 B.C. It has been identified by Professor Wilson and others with the present village of Kasia, in the east of the Gorakhpur district, and it was also anciently known as Kusāvati. Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 79, Law (B C), op cit, pp 147-148, Dey, op cit, p 111.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, p 148. Cf Bühler, op cit, p 27, Stevenson (Rev.), Kalpa Sūtra, p 91

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

prove this. At Pāvā the followers of Nigantha Nātaputta were divided after the death of their great Tīrthankara<sup>1</sup> We find that there were both ascetics and lay-devotees among these Jainas, for we read that, on account of the disputations among the ascetics, 'even the lay-disciples of the white robe, who followed Nātaputta, showed themselves shocked, repelled and indignant at the Niganthas' These lay-Jains appear from this passage to have been draped in white robes, just as the Śvetāmbaras are at the present day. The Buddha as well as Sāriputta, one of the principal disciples, seems to have taken advantage of the schism that appears to have overtaken the Jaina church on the death of their founder for the propagation of the rival faith In the Pāsādika Suttānta we find that it is Cunda, the novice of Pāvā, who brings the news of the death of the great Tīrthankara, Mahāvira, to Ānanda at Sāmagāma in the Malla country, and the latter at once saw the importance of the event and said 'Friend Cunda, this is a worthy subject to bring before the Exalted one Let us go to him and tell him about it' They hastened to the Buddha, who delivered a long discourse''<sup>2</sup>

Moreover, from the Jaina sources we know that the Malla people were devotedly attached to Mahāvira, the last prophet of the Jainas As already remarked, we are informed by the Kalpa-Sūtra that, to mark the passing away of the Great Jina along with the nine Licchavis, nine Mallakis or Malla chiefs also were among those who observed fast and instituted an illumination on the fifteenth day of the new month with the words "Since the light of the intelligence is gone, let us make an illumination of material matter"<sup>3</sup> Besides this it may be mentioned here that in the Antagaḍa-Dasāo, the eighth Anga of the Jainas, we get a reference to the Mallakis, along with the Ugras, the Bhogas, the Kshatriyas and the Licchavis, who went to receive Ariththanemi or Arishtanemi, the twenty-second prophet of the Jainas, when he went to the city of Bāravai.<sup>4</sup>

Taking next the eighteen Ganarājās of Kāsi-Kosala we find that they too, like the Mallakis and the Licchavis, were devoted to Mahāvira They also observed fast and instituted an illumination to mark the passing away of the Great Jina.<sup>5</sup> Furthermore,

<sup>1</sup> Cf Bühler, op and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Law (B C), op cit, pp 158-154 Cf Dialogues of the Buddha, pt III, pp 208 ff, 208, 212

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, op cit, p 266

<sup>4</sup> Cf Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā, sūti 128, p 121.

<sup>5</sup> Barnett, op cit, p 86.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

as we have already seen, the Jaina sources tell us that along with the Mallakī chiefs these eighteen confederate kings of Kāśī-Kosala were also called by Cetaka when he came to know that Kūṇika had declared war against him.

Considering the Kāśī-Kosala confederacy we know from different sources that the Kāśīs—i.e. the people of Kāśī—were closely connected, both as foes and allies, with the people of Kosala and Videha<sup>1</sup> “Of the sixteen Mahājanapadas Kāśī was probably at first the most powerful,” and it is accepted as such by both the Jaina and the Buddhist lists<sup>2</sup> Its importance in connection with the Jaina history of the days of Pārśva we have already referred to During his wanderings as a monk Mahāvīra also visited this place<sup>3</sup> It may be mentioned here that in the Antagaḍa-Dasāo there is some reference to a king named Alakkhe of the city of Vārāṇasī who joined the order<sup>4</sup>

Finally, considering Kosala of the Kāśī-Kosala confederacy we find that, like Kāśī, this also was one of the sixteen states, of considerable extent and power, and it also is found in both the Buddhist and the Jaina literature<sup>5</sup> Geographically, Kosala roughly corresponds to the modern Oudh, and it seems to have contained three great cities—namely, Ayodhya, Sāketa and Sāvattī, or Śrāvastī—the first two of which are often supposed to be one and the same<sup>6</sup> Of these Śrāvastī, “the capital of Kosala,”<sup>7</sup> was more than once visited by Mahāvīra, and all along he was well received there<sup>8</sup> “Traditionally Śrāvastī, or, as it was called, Candrikāpurī or Candrapurī, was the birthplace of the third Tīrthankara Sambhavanātha and the eighth Tīrthankara Candraprabha of the Jamas There is still a Jaina temple here dedicated to Sobhānāth, which is evidently a corruption of Sambhavanātha”<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 44

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, pp 59, 60

<sup>3</sup> Cf Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 221, Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Ṭīkā, p 106

<sup>4</sup> Barnett, op cit, p 96

<sup>5</sup> Raychaudhuri, op and loc cit

<sup>6</sup> Ibid, pp 62-63

<sup>7</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p 214 “Sāvattī is the great ruined city on the south bank of Rapti called Sabeth-Maheth, which is situated on the borders of the Gonda and Bahriah districts of the United Provinces”—Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 63 Cf Dey, op cit, pp 189-190

<sup>8</sup> अग्रे सावत्थी लोगो बंदे—Āvaśyaka-Sūtra p 221 Cf ibid, pp 204, 214, Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Ṭīkā, pp 103, 105, 106, Barnett, op cit, p 98, Jacobi, op cit, p 264

<sup>9</sup> Dey, op cit, p 190 “Śrāvastī is the Sāvattī or Sāvattīpura of the Buddhists and Candrapura or Candrikāpurī of the Jains”—Ibid, p 190

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

We know from various sources that both the Kosalas and the Śaisunāgas were also connected by matrimonial relations. Kosala-devī, the daughter of Mahākosala, had become one of the wives of Srenika with Cellanā, the foremost female disciple of Mahāvīra.<sup>1</sup> Besides this, certain Buddhist traditions tell us that Migara or Mrgadhara, the first minister of Prasenajit of Śāvatthī, the son of Mahākosala, was a sceptic and an adherent of the naked Tīrthakas (i.e. Nirgrantha ascetics).<sup>2</sup>

II

Taking into consideration all the facts that are laid down above, one thing that becomes fully evident is that practically all the most important sixteen Mahājanapadas had, in one or the other capacity, come under the influence of the Jaina church.<sup>3</sup> Of the sixteen Great Powers we have as yet said hardly anything about Magadha, this is not because Magadha could not be combined with the other Great Powers, but because this pre-Norman Wessex of ancient India is going to be our centre from whence all further discussions about Jaina history shall proceed.

"The flourishing period of any of the sixteen Mahājanapadas," observes Dr Raychaudhuri, "ended in or about the sixth century B.C. The history of the succeeding period is the story of the absorption of the states into a number of powerful kingdoms, and ultimately into one empire—namely, the empire of Magadha."<sup>4</sup> We need not enter into any direct details as to how this "one empire" of ancient India came to play the part of Prussia in the history of modern Germany. All that need be said is to show how far the different dynasties ruling over this empire were connected with the Jaina church. Beginning with the Śaisunāgas, the Nandas and the Mauryas we shall come down to the times of Khāravela, who,

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Pradhan, op cit, p. 218, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 99.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Hoernle, op cit, Appendix III, pp. 56-57, Rockhill, op cit, pp. 70-71, Ralston, Schneider's Tibetan Tales, No VII, p. 110, Pradhan, op cit, p. 215.

<sup>3</sup> The names of the sixteen Great Nations, according to the Buddhist traditions, are as follows: Kāśī, Kosala, Anga, Magadha, Vajji, Malla, Cētya (Cedi), Vamsa (Vatsa), Kuru, Pañcāla, Maccha (Matsya), Śūrasena, Assaka, Avanti, Gandhāra, Kamboja. The Jaina list in the Bhagavatī runs to the following effect: Anga, Banga, Magadha (Magadha), Malaya, Mālava, Accha, Vaccha (Vatsa), Koccha (Kaccha?), Pādha (Pāndya), Lādha (Rādha), Bajji (Vajji), Mohi, Kāśī, Kosala, Avaha, Sambhuttara (Sumhotara?). Dr Raychaudhuri has made the following note to these lists: "It will be seen that Anga, Magadha, Vatsa, Vajji, Kāśī and Kosala are common to both the lists. Mālava of the Bhagavatī is probably identical with Avanti of Anguttara. Mohi is probably a corruption of Malla."—Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp. 59-60.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, pp. 97-98. Cf. Law (B.C.), op cit, p. 161.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

as we shall see later on, like Aśoka, enjoys the unique honour of being responsible for a distinct landmark in the history of the Northern Jains

Before taking up the particular dynasties that had their sway over the Magadhan empire it will not be out of place to say something about the historical and geographical importance of Magadha proper, in the light of Jaina history. It roughly corresponds to the present Patna and Gaya, the districts of Bihar. Its earliest capital was Girivraja ("hill-surrounded") or old Rājagṛha, near Rājgir among the hills near Gaya.<sup>1</sup> The capital seems to have been an impregnable city, being protected by five hills. "It is bounded on the north by Baibhāra-giri and Bipula-giri (the former on the western side and the latter on the eastern side), on the east by Bipula-giri and Ratnagiri or Ratnakūṭa; on the west by a portion of the Baibhāra-giri called Cakra and Ratnācala, and on the south by Udaya-giri, Sona-giri and Girivraja-giri."<sup>2</sup> These hills, one and all, enjoy a very important place in Jaina history even to this day. There are Jaina temples of Mahāvīra, Pārśva and other Tirthankaras on the Baibhāra, Bipula, Udaya and Sona-giri hills.<sup>3</sup>

Besides this, Mahāvīra's personal connections with Magadha are self-evident when we know from the Kalpa-Sūtra that the greater part of his missionary life he spent in Rājagṛha and the suburb of Nālandā.<sup>4</sup> No less than fourteen rainy-seasons he was there,<sup>5</sup> and that too not only as an independent preacher but, as we shall see later on, as one who had the State behind him to directly patronise and sympathise with him in his great mission. Moreover, we know from the list of the Śīhavis that the eleven *Ganadhara*s of the Venerable ascetic Mahāvīra died in Rājagṛha after a long religious fast.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> It is known by some other names also. For instance the Life of Huen-Tsang observes "The old city of Rājagṛha is that which is called Kiu-she-kie la-po lo (Kūśāgarapura). This city is in the centre of Magadha and in old times many rulers and kings lived in it"—Beal, Life of Huen-Tsang p. 118. Cf. Cunningham, op cit, p. 529. Indian Buddhist writers gave still another name, Bimbisārapuri. Cf. Law (B.C.), Buddhaghosha, p. 87, n. 1, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 70.

<sup>2</sup> Dey, op cit, p. 66. Cf. Cunningham, op cit, p. 530.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, pp. 530-532.

<sup>4</sup> Nālandā is identified with Bargaon, which lies seven miles to the north west of Rājgir in the district of Patna. Cf. Cunningham, op cit, p. 536. It contains a beautiful Jaina temple of Mahāvīra, who appears to have dwelt at Nālandā, perhaps on the site of the present temple, while Buddha resided in the Pāvārika mango-orchard.—Dey, op cit, p. 137.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Jacobi, op and loc cit.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid, p. 287.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Coming to the different dynasties that ruled over Magadha since the days of Mahāvira we shall begin with the Śaisunāgas of the time of Bimbisāra, but before we do that we shall see if there is anything that can form a connecting link between Magadha and the Jaina church of the age previous to that of Vardhamāna "The Jaina writers mention two early kings of Rājagṛha named Samudravijaya and his son Jaya"<sup>1</sup> Of these Jaya, the eleventh Cakravartin, or universal monarch, according to the Uttarādhyayana, "together with thousands of kings, renouncing the world, practised self-restraint He reached perfection which has been taught by the Jainas"<sup>2</sup>

Leaving aside such uncorroborated facts of Jaina annals we shall enter into the realm of known facts, historical and others, and shall see how far the Jaina traditions are connected with them Taking first Bimbisāra, the Śaisunāga, we find that the Jaina annals are so overwhelming about this "lion of kings"<sup>3</sup> that, so far as they are concerned, it is no use denying the fact that he was a sincere follower of Nātaputta and his doctrines However, before trying to enumerate a few of these details it is desirable to know from various sources what was the strength of the Magadhan empire during the Śaisunāgas, because, after all, the progress of a church depends much on the strength of the people and the State whose patronage it enjoys

For this we need not enter into a detailed description of the wars and the political feuds and intrigues that the Śaisunāgas had to encounter until finally they developed into "one empire—namely, the empire of Magadha" We shall merely mention a few of the Mahājanapadas that were openly defeated or that had indirectly accepted their sovereignty

The early Buddhist texts throw a flood of light on the political condition of India during the time of Bimbisāra There were, as Dr Rhys Davids observes, "besides a still surviving number of small aristocratic republics, four kingdoms of considerable extent and power."<sup>4</sup> In addition to these there were a number of smaller

<sup>1</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 72 Cf Jacobi, SBE, xlv, p 86

<sup>2</sup> अश्विनी रायसहस्रेहिं सुपरिचाई दनं चरे ।

मयनामो निखल्लार्थं एतौ गच्छन्मुत्तरं ॥

—Uttarādhyayana, Adhyayana XVIII, v 48 Cf Jacobi, op cit, pp 85-87, Raychaudhuri, op and loc cit

<sup>3</sup> रायसीहो Uttarādhyayana, Adhyayana XX, v. 58

<sup>4</sup> Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p 1

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

kingdoms and some non-Āryan principalities. As we have already seen, the most important amongst the republics were the Vajjians of Vaiśālī, and the Mallas of Kusinārā (Kusinagara) and Pāvā. However the most important factors in the political history of the period were neither the republics nor the other principalities, but the four great kingdoms of Kosala, Vatsa, Avantī and Magadha, respectively ruled over by Prasenajit, Udāyana, Pradyota and Bimbisāra.<sup>1</sup>

Of these Bimbisāra or Srenika, the real founder of the Magadhan imperial power, strengthened his position by matrimonial alliances with the more powerful of the neighbouring states, having taken one consort from the royal family of Kosala, together with a village in the district of Kāśī producing a revenue of a hundred thousand for bath and perfume money,<sup>2</sup> and another from the influential Licchavi clan at Vaiśālī. We have referred to both these marriages before, and hence suffice it to say that they were of great importance for the history of Magadha. They paved the way for the expansion of Magadha both westwards and northwards. Thus disarming the hostility of his powerful western and northern neighbours by his shrewd policy, Bimbisāra could devote his undivided attention to the struggle with Anga, the capital of which—i.e. Campā—as we have seen, was occupied and destroyed by Śatānika, the king of Kauśāmbī, a few years before Bimbisāra's annexation. The addition of Anga formed the first step taken by the kingdom of Magadha in its advance to greatness and the position of supremacy which it attained later on.<sup>3</sup> This is also confirmed by the Jaina sources, which tell us that Anga was governed as a separate province under Kūnika, the Magadhan prince, with Campā as its capital.<sup>4</sup>

"Thus," observes Dr Raychaudhuri, "by war and policy Bimbisāra added Anga and a part of Kāśī to the Magadhan dominations, and launched Magadha in that career of conquest and aggrandisement which only ended when Aśoka sheathed his sword after the conquest of Kalinga. We learn from the Mahāvagga that Bimbisāra's dominions embraced 80,000 townships, the overseers (Gāṃikas) of which used to meet in a great assembly."<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp 116, 120

<sup>2</sup> Cf Pradhan, op cit, p 214, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 124

<sup>3</sup> Cf Smith, Early History of India, p 88

<sup>4</sup> बभ्रवो कश्चिको राजा बभ्रुः, —Bhagavati, sūt 900, p 316 Cf Dey, J.A.S.B., 1914, p 322, Hemacandra, Parīkṣhāparvan, Canto IV, vv 1, 9, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 125, Aupapātika-Sūtra, sūt 6

<sup>5</sup> Raychaudhuri, op and loc cit Cf Pradhan, op cit, pp 218-214

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

With Ajātaśatru, also called Kūnika or Kuniya, the successor of Srenika, Magadha reaches the high-water mark of the power of the Bimbisārian dynasty. He not only humbled Kosala and permanently annexed Kāśi, but, as the Jainas tell us, also absorbed the state of Vaiśālī.<sup>1</sup> As a result of his war with the Kosalas, like his father, Ajātaśatru was also given in marriage Vajirā, the princess of Kosala and the daughter of Prasenajit, with a part of the district of Kāśi as her dowry, and in all probability he won for Magadha a decided preponderance over its neighbour, Kosala. It is certain that the latter kingdom is not again mentioned as an independent Power, and that later on it formed the integral part of the Magadhan empire.<sup>2</sup> However, Kūnika's victory over Vaiśālī and its Mallakī and other allies, including the rulers of Kāśi-Kosala, was more decisive and highly fruitful from the point of view of the expansion of the Magadhan Empire.<sup>3</sup>

"It may be presumed" observes Smith, "that the invader carried his victorious arms to their natural limits, the foot of the mountains, and that from this time the whole region between the Ganges and the Himalayas became subject, more or less, directly to the suzerainty of Magadha."<sup>4</sup> He must have felt from the very beginning that the Licchavis formed the greatest bar to the realisation of his idea of Magadhan expansion, and we find him taking the dreadful resolve, "I will root out these Vajjians, mighty and powerful though they be. I will destroy these Vajjians. I will bring these Vajjians to utter ruin."<sup>5</sup> Thus the Kosalan and the Licchavi or the Vajjian wars were probably not isolated events,

<sup>1</sup> वज्जी विदेहपुत्रे नग्न्या, नवनगरीं नवलेखीं काशीकोशलगा अट्टारसि गयरायाको पराजित्वा ॥
—Bhagavati, sūt 800, p. 315. Cf. Avastya Sūtra, p. 684, Hemacandra, Trishashti-Sādhā, Parva X, v. 290, p. 168, Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp. 126-127.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Smith, op cit, p. 37, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 67, Pradhan, op cit, p. 215.

<sup>3</sup> The Bhagavati tells us that, in the war with Vaiśālī, Ajātaśatru is said to have made use of Mahānidkanjaka and Rathamusala. The first seems to have been some engine of war of the nature of a catapult which threw big stones. The second was a chariot to which a mace was attached, and which, running about, effected a great execution of men. For a full description of these two wonderful engines of war see Bhagavati, sūt 300, 301 pp. 816, 819. Cf. Hoernle, op cit, Appendix II, pp. 59-60, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 129, Tawney, Kathākosā, p. 179.

<sup>4</sup> Smith, op and loc cit. "Kūnika Ajātaśatru made protracted war on the confederacy of the Licchavis, the Mallakas and the eighteen Ganarājās of Kāśi-Kosala for more than sixteen years, and at last was able to effect their ruin, which it was his firm resolve to do, although his cause was unrighteous."—Pradhan, op cit, pp. 215, 216. (f. Hoernle, op cit, Appendix I, p. 7.)

<sup>5</sup> SBE, xi, pp. 1, 2. Cf. Law (B. C.), Some Kshatriya Tribes of Ancient India, p. 111. For a detailed description about Magadha and Vaiśālī conflict see ibid, pp. 111-116.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

but parts of a common movement directed against the establishment of the hegemony of Magadha

The absorption of Vaiśālī, Videha, Kāśī and other territories as a result of these wars to a great extent brought the aspiring ruler of Magadha face to face with the equally ambitious sovereign of Avanti. We already know that the throne of Avanti was at this time occupied by Canda Pradyota Mahāsena. That he was a king feared by his neighbours is apparent from a statement of the Majjhima Nikāya that Ajātaśatru fortified Rājagṛha because he was afraid of an invasion of his territories by Pradyota.<sup>1</sup> This does not seem to be improbable in view of the fact that after the fall of Anga and Vaiśālī, and the discomfiture of Kosala, Avanti was the only important rival left for Magadha.

Thus by the end of Kūṇika's reign Magadha had absorbed almost all the kingdoms and republics of Eastern India. During his son and successor Udāyin's period, as the Jaina traditions tell us, Magadha and Avanti were brought face to face with each other.<sup>2</sup> The Sihavivāhā Carita and other Jaina sources inform us that Udāyin was a very powerful king, and defeated and killed the king of a certain country in battle, and the son of that king went to Ujjayini and there related the story of his distress to him. The deposed prince got into the favour of the Avanti lord, and with his help, having disguised as a monk, finally murdered Udāyin while asleep. If nothing else, this particular legend gives an insight into the spirit of rivalry that existed between Avanti and Magadha, both of whom tried to acquire the paramount power in Northern India.<sup>3</sup>

Furthermore, from the equally aggressive policy of the Avanti ruler it seems clear that it was a contest between the two for the mastery of Northern India. Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara and other Jaina traditions tell us that the kingdom of Kauśāmbī was at this time annexed to the realm of Pālaka of Avanti,<sup>4</sup> the son of Pradyota.<sup>5</sup> Thus the Avanti-Magadha contest which, as we have seen, began in the régime of Ajātaśatru seems to have continued during the reign of Udāyin. "The contest was finally decided in favour of

<sup>1</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 128, Pradhan, op cit, p 216

<sup>2</sup> अभूदसहस्रो निरुपवन्तीशोऽपुदायिनः—Hemacandra, Parīkṣāparvan, Canto VI, v 191
Cf Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 690 Cf Pradhan, op cit, p 217

<sup>3</sup> Cf Hemacandra, op cit, vv 189-190, 208, Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, op and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 131

<sup>5</sup> चञ्जयिन्ना प्रद्योतमुत्तरी इति क्षात्रपौ-पालको, etc —Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p 699

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Magadha under the leadership of Śaṣunāga, who, according to the Purāṇas, destroyed the prestige and influence of the descendants of Pradyota,"<sup>1</sup> though the Jaina sources tell us that Avantī now and then suffered defeat at the hands of Udāyin<sup>2</sup>

Here arises the difficulty as to who was the real successor of Udāyin. But we need not at all enter, for the present, into any discussions about these controversial and still unsettled facts of Indian history. For our purpose suffice it to reiterate the fact that the contest between Magadha and Avantī was finally decided in favour of the former under the leadership of some Śaṣunāga,<sup>3</sup> who is known to us either as Śisunāga or Nandivardhana, or whose full name may be, as Dr Pradhan suggests, Nandivardhana-Śisunāga.<sup>4</sup>

Thus having seen the growth of the Magadhan Empire under the Śaṣunāgas we shall see in brief how far the Jaina church was connected with them. It may be stated here that whatever has been said up till now and whatever is going to be said from now about the different kings and dynasties that are claimed by the Jainas as their own or as those of their sympathisers has been claimed by the Buddhists also. There are reasons and reasons for this phenomenon of Indian history, but we need not enter at all into these details, because thereby it is not possible to fix a criterion in accordance with which we can say that such and such a king was a Buddhist or a Jaina by faith. Unless there are some inscriptional records or other sound historical documents it is not possible to put down anything as an historical fact. Nothing can be predicted as gospel truth where the source of information rests only with the canonical books and with some legendary and literary traditions of the people.

Taking first Bimbisāra or the Śrenika of the Jainas it must be said that, whatever may be the claims of the Buddhists about him, looking to the nature of the evidence put forward by the Jainas it is certain that he was a great devotee of Mahāvīra. So much has been written about him and his successors by the Jainas that it is not possible to do anything but enumerate a few of the facts connected with their careers with a view to illustrate their relations with the Jaina church. The Uttarādhyaṇa tells us that King

<sup>1</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p. 217. Cf. Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 132.

<sup>2</sup> उदयिनी राजा बहुश बहुश परिभूयते उदयिना — Īvanyaka Sūtra, p. 690.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Pradhan, op cit, pp. 217, 220. Raychaudhuri op cit, pp. 133, 184.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Pradhan, op cit, p. 220, Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp. 132, 133.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

with which the Jainas held one of their greatest royal patrons,<sup>1</sup> whose historicity, fortunately, is past all doubts

Taking next the Kūnika of the Jainas we find that they are not so eloquent about him as about his father Śrenika, though a lot of literature can be had which throws light on almost all the incidents connected with his life<sup>2</sup> However, leaving this fact aside, there is one thing about his career that clearly brings out the attitude of this great monarch towards both the Buddhists and the Jainas

This incident of Kūnika's life is connected with his succession to the throne of Magadha The Buddhists definitely tell us that "Bimbisāra made over the charge of government to his son Ajātaśatru when the latter was about to stab him with a dagger, but was seized upon by the officers Ajātaśatru however starved him to death, and afterwards expressed repentance to Buddha for his sin"<sup>3</sup> The Jainas, on the other hand, have got something else to offer about this very incident According to them no doubt the parricide Ajātaśatru of the Buddhists imprisoned his father and greatly ill-treated him, but the death of Śrenika took place under circumstances which would draw our sympathy rather than our hatred for both the father and the son—for the former for his untimely death, and for the latter for his good motives being misunderstood by the victim of this incident

The Jaina account of this tradition in brief runs as follows Though Śrenika had made up his mind that he would make Kūnika his successor, the latter felt a bit impatient and suspicious, and on the advice of his brothers Kāla and others imprisoned his father

<sup>1</sup> For Śrenika's attachment towards Mahāvīra see जेणिए राया, जेणिया देवी ॥ परिसा निगगा, धम्मो कहिजो—Bhagavati, sūt 4, 6, pp 6, 10, महस्स कुमारस्स जज्झापियरो समयो भगव महावीर वंदति नमसंति एव वदासी —जन्हे सं देवाणुप्पियायां सिस्सभिकस्स दल्लवानो—Jñāna-Sūtra, sūt 25, p 60 Cf Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā, p 20 (जेणिक) राया भयति—जहं युज्जानु नापेय कचं नरकं गमिष्यामि—Āvātyaka-Sūtra, p 681 In this way many more such references about Śrenika can be gathered from the Jaina canonical books, but for our purpose suffice it to say that the Jainas respect him as the first Tīrthankara of the coming age जेणिकराइनीव पत्तनाभी जिनेन्द्र —Hemacandra, op cit, v 189, p 179 Cf Tawney, op cit, p 178

<sup>2</sup> About the whole of Aupapātika, the first Upāṅga of the Jainas, deals with Ajātaśatru Besides this we get references about him in the Bhagavati, the Uvāsaga Dasdo, the Antagada Dasdo, and many other places Kūnika has been fully dealt with by the Jainas

<sup>3</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p 214 Cf Rockhill, op cit, pp 95 ff, Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddha, pt 1, p 94, Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp 126 127, Rhys Davids (Mrs), op cit, pp 109-110

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

During his imprisonment Bimbisāra was no doubt very badly treated by his son, but his comforts were very keenly looked after by his wife Cellanā, the mother of Kūnika. Once it so happened that while he was taking his food with his son Udaya in his lap, the child's urine fell into his dishes, but without taking any notice of this he went on taking his food. After a short while he asked his mother, who was sitting near him, "Mother, did anybody ever love his son so much?" His mother replied, "You monstrous criminal, listen! When you were born I abandoned you in an enclosure of Aśoka-trees, saying that you were a villain. When your father came to know about this he himself went to the enclosure and brought you back, so you were named Aśokacandra. Then a cock tore your finger. It became a whitlow. So all gave you the name of Konika. When the swelling on your finger ripened you suffered a good deal of pain from it. Your father held that finger in his mouth, though streaming with matter, so you did not cry. To this extent did he love you." When Kūnika heard this he was full of remorse. He said, "A sorry return I have made to my father." So he immediately went off in person with an iron club to break the fetters of his father. In the meanwhile the guards said to Śrenika, "Konika is coming in a very impatient mood, with an iron club in his hand, it is not known what his object is." Hearing this, Śrenika felt that he would be put to death by some painful execution, so he took Tālaputa poison and died then and there, before Kūnika could come over to break his father's fetters. When Kūnika came to know about this sad coincidence he was very much afflicted at the loss of his father. Though admonished by his nobles he would not bathe or take food. Then, being unable to endure his sorrow for his father, he left Rājagṛha, and made Campā the seat of his rule.<sup>1</sup>

This incident of Kūnika's life as laid down by the Jainas makes at least this much clear—that it was not he who murdered or starved Śrenika to death. This is because there is nothing in this account that is unnatural or cannot be believed. It further shows that the Jainas were in the good books of Kūnika, because if otherwise they would, like the Buddhists, have given a crude version of this unfortunate happening of his life.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, pp. 682-683, Hemacandra, op. cit., pp. 161-164, Tawney, op. cit., pp. 176-178.

<sup>2</sup> "It is probable, however, that the story is the product of odium theologicum, or sectarian rancour, which has done so much to falsify the history of ancient India."

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

This surmise of ours is greatly strengthened when we read from the Buddhist sources themselves of Ajātaśatru being incited to get his father slain by Devadatta, "the quondam disciple and bitter foe of the Buddha," and hence "the Judas Iscariot of the Buddhist story" <sup>1</sup> Furthermore, commenting on the Buddhist tradition of Kūṃka's having repented before Buddha for his sin, Dr Rhys Davids observes "At the close of the discourse the king is stated to have openly taken Buddha as his guide in future, and to have given expression to the remorse he felt at the murder of his father. But it is also distinctly stated that he was not converted. There is no evidence that he really, after the moment when his heart was touched, continued to follow the Buddha's teaching. He never, so far as we know, waited again either upon the Buddha or upon any member of the order to discuss ethical matters, and we hear of no material support given by him to the order during the Buddha's lifetime" <sup>2</sup>

What Buddha and Ajātaśatru thought of each other is clear from the following two passages from the Buddhist literature "Then Devadatta went to Prince Ajātaśatru and said 'Give such order, O King, to our men that I may deprive the samana Gotama of life', and Ajātaśatru the prince gave orders to his men 'Whatsoever the worthy Devadatta tells you, that do!'" <sup>3</sup>

The above passage clearly shows the nature of Kūṃka's repentance before Lord Buddha. The following one, moreover, manifests the estimate in which the latter held the former "Almsmen, the king of Magadha, Ajātaśatru, son of the accomplished princess, is a friend to, an intimate of, mixed with, whatever is evil" <sup>4</sup>

On the other hand the Aupapātika and other Jaina sources tell us that Kūṃka used to go with his queens, now and then,

Later when, in consequence of Aśoka's patronage, Buddhism became pre-eminent in Northern India, leanings towards Jainism became criminal in the eyes of ecclesiastical chroniclers, who were ready to blacken the memory of persons deemed heretical with unfounded accusations of the gravest character — Smith, op cit, pp 38, 37

<sup>1</sup> Rhys Davids, Buddhist India pp 13-14 Cf Rhys Davids and Oldenberg, SBE, xx, pp 238-265 And Devadatta went to Ajātaśatru the prince and said to him "In former days, Prince, people were long-lived but now their term of life is short. It is quite possible, therefore, that you may complete your time while you are still a prince. So do you, Prince, kill your father and become the Rājā and I will kill the blessed one and become Buddha" — Ibid, p 241

<sup>2</sup> Rhys Davids, op cit, p 15

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya Texts, pt iii, p 243

<sup>4</sup> Rhys Davids (Mrs), op cit, p 109

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

to the Mahāvamsa, murdered by his son Udāyibhadra,<sup>1</sup> but the Śihavirāvali-Carita informs us that Udāyin was overpowered with sorrow at the death of his father Ajātaśatru, and transferred his capital from Campā to Pātaliputra.”<sup>2</sup>

This part of the Jaina tradition is confirmed by the testimony of the Vāyu Purāṇa, according to which Udāyi built the city of Kusumapura (Pātaliputra<sup>3</sup>) in the fourth year of his reign,<sup>4</sup> and hence it seems almost certain that Udāyin was in no way connected with the death of his father. It is not possible to say why the Buddhists have pictured him, like his father, as a man whose greed for power and position did override even the natural instinct of regard for his father's life. If the Buddhist tradition of the Mahāvamsa had any ground at its back the Jaina writers would have at least taken a note of it, as they have done in the case of Kūnika.

The Jainas, on the other hand, tell us that he was a devout Jaina. By his order a fine Jaina temple was built in the centre of his new capital, Pātaliputra.<sup>5</sup> That the Jaina monks had free access to him is clear from the fact, as related before, that he was murdered by some prince, whose father had been dethroned by him, in the disguise of a monk. Furthermore, from this very incident we can infer that, like an orthodox Jaina, he was regularly observing the monthly religious festivals, because it was on a Paushadhaday that the Sūri, accompanied by the novice who carried a concealed weapon about him, went to the palace and preached to the king.<sup>6</sup>

This is, in short, what the Jainas have to say about the Saisunāgas, under whom the Magadhan Empire took a definite form.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Geiger, op cit, v 1.

<sup>2</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p 216. Cf. ibid, p 219. “The Ceylonese chronicles state that all the kings from Ajātaśatru were parricides”—Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 188, Hemacandra, Parīśuśīlāparvan, Canto VI, vv 32-180. Cf. Āśvāyaka-Sūtra, pp 687, 689.

<sup>3</sup> “The choice of Pātaliputra was probably due to its position in the centre of the realm, which now included North Bihar. Moreover, its situation at the confluence of two large rivers (the Ganges and the Son) was important from the commercial as well as the strategic point of view. In this connection it is interesting to note that Kautilya recommends a site at the confluence of rivers for the capital of a kingdom”—Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 181.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Pargiter, op cit, p 69, Pradhan, op cit, p 216, Raychaudhuri, op cit and loc cit.

<sup>5</sup> नगरनाभौ षोडशिका चैवगृहं कारितं, —Āśvāyaka-Sūtra, p 689. Cf. Hemacandra, op cit, v 181.

<sup>6</sup> स राजाऽग्नीचतुर्दशोः दीपं करोति —Āśvāyaka-Sūtra, p 690. Cf. Hemacandra, op cit, v 186, ibid, vv 186-230, Charpentier, CH I, 1, p 164.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Let it be clear that we have not entered into any details while dealing with them in their relations with the Jaina church, and that we do not mean doing so in the case of other dynasties that are mentioned in this chapter. It need not, however, be understood that all these details are superfluous, but that it is neither possible nor desirable to enter into them while taking a general historical review of the northern Jamas.

Coming to the successors of Udāyin we find that, according to the Buddhist traditions, he was succeeded by Anuruddha, Munda and Nāga-Dāsaka. The traditions tell us further that all these were parricides, and that "the people became angry, banished the dynasty and raised an Amātya named Sūsu-Nāga (Sisunāga) to the throne"<sup>1</sup>. However, the Jaina and Purāṇic traditions omit or forget the weaklings Anuruddha and others, and put down some Nanda or Nandivardhana as the successor of the Udāyibhadda of the Buddhists.<sup>2</sup>

The Jainas say that on the death of Udāyin, who left no heirs, the five royal insignia—viz the State elephant, the horse, the parasol, the pitcher and the chowries—were anointed by the ministers and led through the streets, and this procession met the marriage procession of a man named Nanda, the son of a courtesan by a barber, and the five royal insignias themselves pointed out Nanda as the king of Magadha. He was accordingly proclaimed king, and ascended the throne sixty years after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvīra.<sup>3</sup>

In connection with the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa we have seen that the Mauryas came to the imperial throne of Magadha one hundred and fifty-five years after the death of Vardhamāna, and thus the Jainas allot ninety-six years to Nanda and his descendants. "This," observes Dr Pradhan, "agrees fairly well with the Purāṇic tradition that the Nandas ruled for about a hundred years. The Purāṇas probably borrowed the information from the ancient Jaina sources."<sup>4</sup>

He says further "Hemacandra who has, on account of the similarity of names, not only confounded Nandi-(a)-Vardhana with

<sup>1</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 183. Cf Geiger, op cit, vv. 2-6, Pradhan, op cit, pp. 218-219, Smith, op cit, p. 36, Rapson, CH I, 1, pp. 312-313.

<sup>2</sup> Cf Āśāyaka Sūtra, pp. 690 ff., Hemacandra, op cit, v. 242, Pargiter, op cit, pp. 22, 69.

<sup>3</sup> नापितदास राजा जात—Āśāyaka-Sūtra, p. 690. Cf Hemacandra, op cit, vv. 231-243.

<sup>4</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p. 218. Cf Pargiter, op cit, pp. 26, 69.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Nanda (=Mahāpadma), but has practically supported the wrong tradition that Nanda (=Mahāpadma) ruled for about a hundred years (95 years according to the Sthavirāvalacarita)”<sup>1</sup>

But there is no such confounding of names on the part of Hemacandra at all. Both Haribhadra and Hemacandra have taken into consideration Nine Nandas, the first of whom really was of base origin.<sup>2</sup> It is not correct to say that “Hemacandra has confounded Nandi-(a)-Vardhana with Nanda (=Mahāpadma),” because if at all the identity of Nandivardhana or Nandavardhana is to be accepted he must go along with the Śaisunāga dynasty as one of those who succeeded Udāyin. This is clear from all sources—both ancient and modern. “The Purāṇas and the Ceylonese authorities,” observes Dr Raychaudhuri, “know of the existence of only one Nanda line. Those works represent Nandivardhana as a king of the Śaisunāga line, a dynasty which is sharply distinguished from the Nandas.”<sup>3</sup>

Thus it is clear that there is no confusion in what has been laid down by the Jainas when they definitely say that Udāyin had no successor, and that the Magadhan empire went into the hands of the Nandas. We are not concerned with the circumstances under which the Śaisunāgas were supplanted by the Nandas. It may be, as we have seen, that Udāyin was succeeded by some weaklings, and that Mahanandin, the last of the dynasty, as Smith observes, “had by a Sūdra, or low caste, woman a son named Mahāpadma Nanda, who usurped the throne, and so established the Nanda family or dynasty.”<sup>4</sup>

This observation of the learned historian essentially agrees with the Jaina tradition that Nanda was born of a courtesan by a barber. This is also corroborated by the Purāṇas and the Greek accounts of the father of Alexander’s Magadhan contemporary. The Purāṇas describe him as Sūdra-garbha-udbhava—i.e. born of a Sūdra mother.<sup>5</sup> The Jaina tradition is strikingly confirmed by the classical accounts, though according to them the Nandas retained possession of the throne for only two generations, and their duration

<sup>1</sup> Pradhan, op cit, p. 220. Cf. ibid, p. 225.

<sup>2</sup> नन्दो नन्द — Avasthyaka Sūtra, p. 693. Cf. Hemacandra, op cit, Canto VII, v. 3.

<sup>3</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 138. Cf. Pargiter, op cit, pp. 23, 24, 69, Smith, op cit, p. 51.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, p. 41.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Pargiter, op cit, pp. 25, 69, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 140, Pradhan, op cit, p. 226, Smith, op cit, p. 43, Rapson, op cit, p. 313.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

was for only fifty-five years<sup>1</sup> Curtius says "His father (i.e. Agrammes' or Xandrammes' father—i.e. the first Nanda—i.e. Mahāpadma Nanda) was, in fact, a barber, scarcely staving off hunger by his daily earnings, but who, from his being not uncomely in person, had gained the affections of the queen, and was, by her influence, advanced too nearer a place in the confidence of the reigning monarch. Afterwards, however, he treacherously murdered his sovereign, and then, under the pretence of acting as the guardian to the royal children, usurped the royal authority, and having put the young princes to death begot the present king, who was detested and held cheap by his subjects, as he rather took after his father than conducted himself as the occupant of a throne"<sup>2</sup>

Besides this agreement between the Jaina and other source about the non-Kshatriya origin of the Nandas we see that chronologically also Jainas are right if, according to Smith, "this even may be dated in or about 413 B.C."<sup>3</sup> This is because, as we have seen, the suzerainty of Magadha passed from the hands of the Śaśunāgas to those of the Nandas sixty years after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvīra, which we have put down between 480-467 B.C. It may be repeated here that the duration of the Nandas as put down by the Jainas is ninety-five years, and this agrees with the Purāṇic traditions. Taking into consideration the tradition based on Merutunga and others, Vincent Smith remarks that "the Jainas, doing still greater violence to reason, extend the duration of the dynasty to 155 years"<sup>4</sup> According to the chronology relied upon by us the period of one hundred and fifty-five years thus alluded to by the great historian does not obtain to the dynasty of the Nandas, but, as already remarked, it is the duration between the death of Mahāvīra and the accession of Candragupta. As it is, our period seems to be acceptable to him, seeing that a period of ninety-one years has been assumed by him as "fitting into a definite chronological scheme"<sup>5</sup>

Thus about the base origin, the date of the succession, and the duration of the Nandas the Jaina traditions are confirmed by other sources also. Before we enter into the details as to where the Jainas

<sup>1</sup> Cf. McCrindle, The Invasion of India by Alexander the Great, p. 409

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 222. Cf. ibid., p. 282, Raychaudhuri, op. cit. and loc. cit., Pradhan, op. cit. and loc. cit., Smith, op. cit., pp. 42-43, Jayaswal, J B O R S, 1, p. 88

<sup>3</sup> Smith, op. cit., p. 13

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., p. 42

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., p. 44

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

stood in their relations with the ruling dynasty it may be seen whether Magadha remained the premier state of India during the period of the Nandas. What we can glean from various sources is that it not only remained an empire, but its boundaries were spread far and wide, so that it remained for Candragupta to extend the imperial dominion by the annexation of the north-western region—which for a few years had owned the sway of Alexander the Great and his Satraps—and for Aśoka to re-establish his authority over Kalinga.

The Purāṇas call Mahāpadma, or Nanda I, the destroyer of all the Kshatriyas—like a second Paraśurāma—and sole monarch of the earth, which was under his undisputed sway<sup>1</sup>. This Purāṇic account of the unification of a considerable portion of India under Nanda's sceptre is corroborated by the classical writers, who speak of the most powerful peoples who dwelt beyond the seas in the time of Alexander as being under one sovereign who had his capital of Pālibhōtra (Pātaliputra). Curtius tells us that Agriamnes, king of Ganjaridae and Prassi, "kept in the field for guarding the approaches to his country 20,000 cavalry and 200,000 infantry, besides 2000 four-horsed chariots, and, what was the most formidable force of all, a troop of elephants, which he said ran up to the number of 3000"<sup>2</sup>. Besides this, the inclusion of Kosala within Nanda's dominions seems to be implied by a passage of the Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara which refers to the camp of the King Nanda in Ayodhya<sup>3</sup>. More important is the evidence of the Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela, which, as we have seen, mentions Nandarāja in connection with an aqueduct of Kalinga, and this naturally seems to imply that Nandarāja held sway in Kalinga<sup>4</sup>. To quote Dr Raychaudhuri: "In view of Nanda's possession of Kalinga, the conquest of regions lying farther south does not seem to be altogether impossible. The existence on the Godavari of a city called 'Nau Nand Dehra' (Nander)<sup>5</sup> also suggests that the Nanda dominions embraced a considerable portion of the Deccan"<sup>6</sup>.

Besides this, as we shall see in the following chapter, the second

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Pargiter op cit, pp 25, 69.

<sup>2</sup> McCrindle, op cit, pp 221-222. Cf. ibid, pp 281-282. Smith, op cit, p 42. Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 141.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Tawney (ed. Penzer), Kathā Sarit Sāgara, I, p 37, Raychaudhuri, op cit and loc cit.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Rapson op cit, p 315.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Macauliffe The Sikh Religion, v, p 236.

<sup>6</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 142.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

passage in the inscription seems to state that Nanda carried away as trophies the image of the Jina of Kalinga as well as other treasures of the Kalinga kings to Magadha. This statement of the Khāravela inscription finally brings us to the discussion of the relations of the Nandas with the Jaina church. The difficulty that arises in connection with this and the other passage referring to Nandarāja is about the identification of this Nandarāja. While considering the Nirvāṇa date of Mahāvīra we have seen that there is no reason why this Nandarāja should be identified with Nandivardhana, as Jayaswal, Banerji, Smith and others have done. Besides the authority of Charpentier, to which reference has been already made, as Professor Chanda points out, "there is nothing in the Purāṇas, our only source of information for Nandivardhana, to show that he ever had anything to do with Kalinga. On the contrary we are distinctly told in the Purāṇas that when the kings of the Śaśunāga dynasty and their predecessors were reigning in Magadha, thirty-two Kalingas—that is to say, thirty-two kings—reigned in Kalinga in succession synchronously.<sup>1</sup> It is not Nandivardhana but Mahāpadma Nanda who is said to have brought 'all under his sole sway' and 'uprooted all Kṣatriyas,' or the old reigning families. So we should identify Nandarāja of the Hāthigumphā inscription who held possession of Kalinga either with the all-conquering Mahāpadma Nanda or one of his sons."<sup>2</sup>

In short, the Nandarāja of the Khāravela inscription is none else but Nanda I of the Jainas or Mahāpadma Nanda of the Purāṇas, because of the later Nandas both the Jaina and the Purāṇic traditions have nothing to say which can claim for any one of them the triumphant career of the first Nanda. It may be remarked here that though the Purāṇic and the Jaina traditions confirm each other to a great extent, the Khāravela inscription rightly supports the latter by calling this Nanda king simply Nandarāja, and not Mahāpadma Nanda, as the Purāṇas have done.

As to the relations of the Jainas and the Nandas, the above reference to the Hāthigumphā inscription tells us that some Jaina image was taken away by King Nanda as a trophy, and this, according to Jayaswal, as we shall see in the next chapter, proves that Nanda was a Jaina, and that Jainism was introduced in Orissa

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Pargiter, op cit pp 24-62

<sup>2</sup> Chanda, Memoirs of the Archaeological Survey of India, No. I, pp 11-12 Cf. Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 138

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Jaina church<sup>1</sup> The ministership was finally given to his brother Śrīyaka, who was already in the king's office<sup>2</sup>

This is how the relationship between the Nandas and the Jainas stands. That the Jainas were powerful in the days of the Nandas is also clear from the Sanskrit play Mudrā-Rākṣasa, which dramatises the story of Candragupta's accession, and tells us that "Jainas held a prominent position at the time," and that Cānakya, "who was the prime agent in the revolution, employs a Jaina as one of his chief emissaries"<sup>3</sup>

Unlike the Śaśunāgas the Jaina records do not throw any particular light upon the political power of the Nandas. They inform us only in a very vague manner that, with the help of the Jaina minister Kalpaka, King Nanda subdued many kings, and that, as we shall see later on, the last Nanda had to throw himself at the mercy of Cānakya, who, being insulted at his court, had taken a vow to dethrone him and to destroy his power. However it must be remembered that this is not the case with the Jaina annals alone. As Dr Charpentier remarks, "The reign of the Nandas is one of the darkest even of the many hopelessly dark epochs in the history of ancient India"<sup>4</sup>

The Nandas are followed by the Maurvas. Why and wherefore the Nandas were supplanted by the Mauryas is not yet clearly known, but this much is certain, that it is in connection with this landmark in Indian history that we get Cānakya, "the first economist of India, if not of the world"<sup>5</sup>. It is strange that no detailed account of the dynastic revolution has survived. However from the classical accounts we have seen that the last Nanda "was detested and held cheap by his subjects". Furthermore, the vast standing army of the Nandas which has been mentioned by pp. 435-436, 693-695, Hemacandra, op cit, vv. 3-82. Smith has wrongly put him down as "Mintrin of the ninth Nanda".—Smith, Early History of India, p. 40, n. 2.

<sup>1</sup> Sudharman, the first pontiff, had died twenty years after his master, leaving the mitre to Jambū, who held his high office for forty-four years, dying at a time nearly coincident with the accession of the Nandas. After him passed three generations of pontiffs, and in the time of the last Nanda the Jaina church was governed by two high priests, Sambhūtavijaya and Bhadrabāhu. —Charpentier, op cit, p. 164, Jacobi, SBE, xxii, p. 287.

<sup>2</sup> श्रीयक स्थापितः, —Āvakyaka Sūtra, p. 436, Hemacandra, op cit, vv. 10, 83, 84.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Narasimhachar, EC, ii, Int., p. 41, Rice (Lewis), Mysore and Coorg, p. 8, Smith Oxford History of India, p. 75.

<sup>4</sup> Charpentier, op and loc cit.

<sup>5</sup> Sammadar, The Glories of Magadha, p. 2.

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

This much about the ancestry of Candragupta. The question as to why Cānakya did not usurp the Magadhan Empire for himself is more or less made clear in the above statement of Dr Raychaudhuri. It seems highly probable that Candragupta himself was, as the Greeks tell us, "prompted to aspire to royalty by an omen significant of an august destiny"<sup>1</sup> Like the other sources of Jaina history the Greek annals also throw comparatively little light on real history. They tell us about Candragupta's having escaped from the death sentence passed upon him by the Nanda king, about a lion having licked the sweat oozing from his body while he was sleeping, about his being inspired from this prodigy with the hope of winning the throne, and about a wild elephant having submissively knelt before him<sup>2</sup>. When such annals, which rank as contemporary witnesses reported at second-hand, throw such light on the period of Candragupta, it is no wonder that the Jaina interpretation, in short, runs as follows. Cānakya had all his teeth complete on being born<sup>3</sup>. The monks being informed of this marvellous circumstance foretold that the boy would become a king, but the father being of a religious turn of mind desired to spare his son a lot which he considered dangerous to the well-being of the inner man. Accordingly to remove the omen he broke out the boy's teeth. Upon which the monks foretold that Cānakya would govern by proxy. Further on, after the defeat of the Nanda king, we are told that his treasures were divided by Candragupta and Parvata between themselves<sup>4</sup>.

Leaving aside these uncorroborated facts of Indian history we shall see in brief what was the strength of the Magadhan Empire during the Mauryas. It may safely be said that the high-water mark of its power and extension was reached during the days of Aśoka. The real conquests and annexations were begun and accomplished during the days of Candragupta and not in the days of Aśoka. Politically the latter was a Quaker, and was better fitted to fill the chair of an abbot than of an emperor. What he did was to reconquer or re-establish the authority of the Magadhan

<sup>1</sup> McCrindle, op cit, p. 327

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, pp. 327-328. Cf. Smith, op cit, p. 123, n. 1

<sup>3</sup> About this incident of Cānakya's life Jacobi makes a note as follows: "The same circumstance is told of Richard III.

"Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born
To signify thou comest to bite the world."

—Jacobi, op cit and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Āśvaka-Sūtra, p. 435, Hemacandra, op cit, v. 327

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

over the Kalingas To quote Rev Heras "The greatest monarch of Hindustan during the Hindu period was Candragupta. His grandson Aśoka's glory is based upon intellectual grounds He was a philosopher rather than a sovereign, he was a teacher of morals rather than an administrator" <sup>1</sup>

Nevertheless the limits of the enormous Mauryan Empire in Magadha were extensive Nearly the whole of Northern India, except the Punjab, Sind and Northern Rajputana, had passed under the Nandas To this vast empire were undoubtedly added the Punjab, Sind, Baluchistan, Afghanistan and presumably, as we have seen in a note to the Parvata of Himavatkūta, Nepal and Kashmir during the days of Candragupta <sup>2</sup> Events in the north itself were so crowded that there was no possibility of his having diverted his attention to the south As Smith observes "It is difficult to believe that he could have found time to do more than climb from obscurity to power, expel the Macedonian garrisons, repel the attack of Seleukos, effect a revolution and establish a dynasty at Pāṭaliputra, annex a large part of Ariāna, and extend his dominion from the Bay of Bengal to the Arabian Sea" <sup>3</sup>

The conquest of the south can be affirmed from various sources to have been effected by Bindusāra, the son and successor of Candragupta He was guided also by his father's minister Cānakya <sup>4</sup> The Deccan, or Peninsular India, down to approximately the latitude of Nellore, must therefore, apparently, have been subjugated by Bindusāra, because it was inherited from the latter by Aśoka, whose only recorded war was the conquest of Kalinga <sup>5</sup> As to the later Mauryas, their contribution to the growth of the Mauryan Empire is next to nothing Really speaking, with the close of Aśoka's reign began the decline of the Maurya rule, and ended with Brhadratha, who, as we shall see in our next chapter, was murdered by his commander-in-chief, Pushyamitra, who established a new dynasty, known as that of the Sungas <sup>6</sup>

Having thus seen in a connected form the growth of the Magadhan Empire during the Mauryas we shall now examine them in their relations with the Jaina church Jaina tradition avers that

<sup>1</sup> Heras, Q J M S, xvii, p 276 Cf Jayaswal, J B O R S, ii, p 83

<sup>2</sup> Cf ibid, p 81

<sup>3</sup> Smith, op cit, p 156 Cf Jayaswal, op and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Arasayaka Sūtra, op cit, p 184

<sup>5</sup> Cf Jayaswal, op cit, pp 82-83, Smith, op cit, p 157, Schiefner, op cit, p 89

<sup>6</sup> Cf Smith, op cit, p 204

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Candragupta, the founder of the dynasty, the conqueror of the Greeks and the first known Emperor of India, was a Jaina. To state briefly the tradition, it is as follows

When King Candragupta was ruling over North India (either from Ujjain or from Pātaliputra) a great twelve years' famine was foretold by the Śrutakevalin Bhadrabāhu, who, as we have seen, was one of the high priests during this period. As a result of this prophecy a large body of Jainas (numbering about 12,000) came to the south, where several of them (including Bhadrabāhu ?) died by the holy vow of Sallekhana, or the total rejection of food unto death. This event took place at Śravana Belgōla, in Mysore. Candragupta, who followed the Samgha, renouncing everything, remained (?) for twelve years at Belgōla, worshipping the footprints of his departed preceptor Bhadrabāhu, and finally himself died by the same rite.

The parentheses and interrogations in the above summary indicate the different versions of a single legend, agreeing in its fundamentals and differing only in details of lesser importance. We have seen that this tradition also forms one of the links connected with the great Digambara-Śvetāmbara schism in the Jaina church, and that it is not acceptable to the Śvetāmbaras, who agree only with the fact of the great famine which lasted for twelve years, and tell us that Ācārya Sūstṛita, who lived in Candragupta's capital, was forced to send his Gana to some other country<sup>1</sup>. Our interest in this tradition lies only so far as it shows that Candragupta was a Jaina. A detailed examination of it must be left to a student of Jainism in South India. However, it may be mentioned here that it has been dealt with at some length by scholars like Narasimhachar of Mysore, Fleet and others<sup>2</sup>.

The earliest literary form of the tradition is found in the Brhat-Kathā-Kośa by Harisena, dating from about A.D. 931<sup>3</sup>. An inscription at Śravana Belgōla, which has been roughly assigned to c. A.D. 600, is supposed to be the basis of this entire account<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Hemacandra, op cit, vv. 877-878. In the list of the Śthaviras Sūstṛita comes after Śthūlabhadra, who is the eighth pontiff of the Jaina church. Cf. Jacobi, S.B.E., xxii, pp. 287-288.

<sup>2</sup> Narasimhachar, op cit, Int., pp. 36-42; Fleet, I.A., xxi, pp. 156-160.

<sup>3</sup> "the Brhat-Kathā Kośa, a Sanskrit work written by Harisena in 931, says that Bhadrabāhu, the last of the Śrutakevalins, had the King Candragupta as his disciple" — Narasimhachar, op cit, Int., p. 37. Cf. Rice (Lewis), op cit, p. 4.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Narasimhachar, op cit, Int., p. 39; ibid, Translation, pp. 1-2; Rice (Lewis), op cit, pp. 3-4.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Some of the modern scholars of great repute and authority have come to the conclusion that Candragupta can safely be called a Jaina on the authority of this tradition "The Jaina books (fifth century A.C.) and later Jaina inscriptions," observes Jayaswal, "claim Candragupta as a Jaina imperial ascetic. My studies have compelled me to respect the historical data of the Jaina writings, and I see no reason why we should not accept the Jaina claim that Candragupta at the end of his reign accepted Jainism and abdicated, and died as a Jaina ascetic."<sup>1</sup>

To quote Smith, who has ultimately leaned towards it "The only direct evidence throwing light on the manner in which the eventful reign of Candragupta Maurya came to an end is that of Jaina tradition. The Jainas always treat the great Emperor as having been a Jaina like Bimbisāra, and no adequate reason seems to exist for discrediting their belief. The Jaina religion undoubtedly was extremely influential in Magadha during the time of the later Śaśunāgas, the Nandas and the Mauryas. The fact that Candragupta won the throne by the contrivance of a learned Brahman is not inconsistent with the supposition that Jainism was the royal faith. Jainas habitually employ Brahmans for their domestic ceremonies, and in the drama cited above (Mudrā-Rākshasa) a Jaina ascetic is mentioned as being a special friend of the minister Rākshasa, who served first the Nanda and then the new sovereign.

"Once the fact that Candragupta was or became a Jaina is admitted, the traditions that he abdicated and committed suicide by slow starvation in the approved Jaina manner become readily credible. It being certain that Candragupta was quite young and inexperienced when he ascended the throne in or about 322 B.C., he must have been under fifty when his reign terminated twenty-four years later. His abdication is an adequate explanation of his disappearance at such an early age. Similar renunciations of royal dignity are on record, and the twelve years' famine is not incredible. In short, the Jaina tradition holds the field, and no alternative account exists."<sup>2</sup>

Besides these two eminent scholars there are others also who are of the same opinion. Both Rice and Narasimhachar, who have studied the Jaina inscriptions of Sravana Belgola thoroughly, give a verdict in favour of it<sup>1</sup> Of the older scholars we have Edward Thomas, who has taken into consideration the Greek accounts and comes to the same opinion<sup>2</sup> Besides this, as Dr Jacobi tells us, "the date of Bhadrabāhu's death is placed identically by all Jaina authors—from Hemacandra down to the most modern scholiast—in the year 170 A V"<sup>3</sup> And this, according to our calculation, falls in about 297 B C This date of the great pontiff's Nirvāna exactly coincides with that of Candragupta, who reigned from 321-297 B C<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jayaswal, J B O R S, III, p. 452

<sup>2</sup> Smith, Oxford History of India, pp. 75-76. "I am disposed to believe that Candragupta really abdicated and became a Jaina ascetic"—Smith, Early History of India, p. 154. Hemacandra informs us that Candragupta समाधिनिर्वाहं प्राप्य दिवं गच्छी—Hemacandra, op cit, v. 444

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

Besides this tradition there are also other references in the Jaina literature which go to show that Candragupta was or had become a Jaina,<sup>5</sup> but we need not now enter more into all these literary sources However, before we pass on to the successors of Candragupta, a few words regarding the importance of the Jaina migration to the south and about the religion followed by Cānakya will not be out of place As to the first, it gives us a definite starting-point in the history of Jainism in South India Besides, its value in general to South Indian history is not less, for we know of no other earlier event of equal moment in the annals of South India The age of Candragupta which Smith, rightly or wrongly, considers to lead the historian "from darkness to light" in North India<sup>6</sup> is thus seen to open a new era in South Indian history as well It is of not less interest to note that the religion which was to give South India her earliest, if not her best, literature also gave her her first reliable historical tradition

Coming next to the faith of Cānakya we find that the Jainas believe that he was also a Jaina, favoured Jaina teachers, and in his

<sup>1</sup> Rice (Lewis), op cit, pp 3-9 "We are therefore not without warrant for assuming that Candragupta was a Jaina by creed"—Ibid, p 8 "A dispassionate consideration of the above-mentioned facts leads one to the conclusion that the Jaina tradition has some basis to stand upon"—Narasimhachar, op cit, Int, p 42

<sup>2</sup> "That Candragupta was a member of the Jaina community is taken by their writers as a matter of course, and treated as a known fact, which needed neither argument nor demonstration The testimony of Megasthenes would likewise seem to imply that Candragupta submitted to the devotional teaching of the Sermānes, as opposed to the doctrines of the Brahmins"—Thomas (Edward), op cit, pp 23-24 For references to Jainism in the Greek annals see Rice (Lewis), op cit, p 8

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, Int, p xiii According to the Digambaras he died in 162 A V Cf Narasimhachar, op cit, Int, p 40

<sup>4</sup> Cf Rice (Lewis), op cit, p 7, Smith, op cit, p 206, Narasimhachar, op cit, Int, p 41

<sup>5</sup> Cf Jacobi, Parīśahjaparoṇ, pp 61-62

<sup>6</sup> Cf Smith, Oxford History of India, p 72

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

old age tried to starve himself to death like a true Jaina saint<sup>1</sup> Tradition represents the "wicked minister" as having repented and retired to "Shookul Tirtha," on the banks of the Narbada, where he died, and Candragupta is also supposed to have accompanied him<sup>2</sup> "Shookul Tirtha" is the exact equivalent of "Belgoja," which in Kanarese means "white pond" In the inscriptions it is also called श्वल झर, which means "white lake"<sup>3</sup> This coincidence, even if it were merely accidental, is certainly significant Apart from minor details, this coincides with the opinion of Rhys Davids that "the linguistic and epigraphical evidence so far available confirms in many respects the general reliability of traditions current amongst the Jainas" He has also remarked "It is certain that in the extant priestly literature Candragupta is completely ignored for about ten centuries"<sup>4</sup> It seems not a little likely that this silence of Brahmanical writers was due in no small measure to the Mauryan Emperor's acceptance of the Jaina religion towards the end of his earthly career

Finally, taking the successors of Candragupta, we have before us Bindusāra, Aśoka, Kunāla and Samprati, according to the Jaina tradition As with the Śaśunāgas and the Nandas so also in the case of the Mauryas there are differences and discrepancies in the lists put forth by various traditions However, as far as Aśoka is concerned there is no trouble It is agreed to by all that Candragupta left behind him his son and successor, Bindusāra, who was in turn followed by his son Aśoka As to the relations of these two Mauryas with the Jainas this much is certain, that their literary traditions are not so eloquent about them as is the case with their predecessor Candragupta and their successor Samprati Nevertheless there are grounds before us to infer that both of them must have been favourably inclined towards the Jaina church About Bindusāra, the predecessor of Aśoka, we know practically little beyond the fact that he sent an embassy to Antiochos Soter

<sup>1</sup> Cf Jacobi, op cit, p 62, Jolly, Arthasāstra of Kauṭilya, Int, pp 10-11 For the mutual relations between the Arthasāstra and Jaina literature see ibid, p 10 We have seen that the Jaina tradition puts Cānakya's father as supposed to have been both a Brahman and a devout Jaina This looks like the Brahmar-Christians of our days This means that Cānakya's family was of Brahman origin by birth or heritage, and Jaina by faith To quote Edward Thomas "But though our king-maker was a Brahman, he was not necessarily, in the modern acceptance of the term, 'Brahmanist'"—Thomas (Edward), op cit, pp 25-26

<sup>2</sup> Cf Smith, op cit, p 75, n 1

<sup>3</sup> Cf Narasimhachar, op cit, Int, p 1

<sup>4</sup> Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, pp 164, 270

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

requesting him to send him a Greek philosopher; and also the inference, from the known extent of his conquests and his father's empire, that he must have extended his dominions so as to cover at least some portions of Mysore<sup>1</sup> Both these facts are not without their significance to us, inasmuch as the first explains to some extent the philosophic eclecticism of Bindusāra, and the second the distribution of Aśoka's edicts in South India It may not be unlikely that, in addition to the Kshatriya ambitions of mere conquest, Bindusāra might have been actuated by filial motive in acquiring Mysore, a place rendered sacred by the last days of his father Candragupta

The Ceylonese traditions, however, assert that Bindusāra was Brahmanical About the father of Asoka the Mahāvamsa informs us that he being of the Brahmanical faith maintained sixty thousand Brahmans<sup>2</sup>, but, as Edward Thomas observes, "their testimony would not carry much weight in the argument about other lands and other times, and it is, moreover, a critical question as to how much they knew about Brahmanism itself, and whether the use of the word 'Brahman' does not merely imply, in their sense, a non-Buddhistic or any religion opposed to their own We may conclude, for all present purposes, that Bindusāra followed the faith of his father, and that, in the same belief—whatever it may prove to have been—his childhood's lessons were first learnt by Aśoka"<sup>3</sup>

Besides this it is not possible to say anything more about the shadowy figure of Bindusāra That, like his father, he also was under the influence of Cānakya we have already remarked The Jaina tradition tells us that during his period the Brahman minister incurred the king's displeasure and was supplanted by some Subandhu<sup>4</sup> Coming to Aśoka, his son and successor, it need not be said that his is not the shadowy figure of his father There is ample material to show how far he kept his relations with the Niggantha church, though there is a great difference of opinion with regard to the one faith which Aśoka might have followed throughout his career What we are most immediately concerned with is Aśoka's attitude towards Jainism, which, apart from his hereditary affinities towards eclecticism, we venture to think must

<sup>1</sup> Cf Smith, Early History of India, pp 155-156

<sup>2</sup> Piṭṭa saṃphassaṃsaṃ brāhmaṇa brahmapakkhike bhōjasa —Geiger, op cit, Paricchedo V, v 34

<sup>3</sup> Thomas (Edward), op cit, p 29

<sup>4</sup> For the circumstances under which Cānakya lost the good will of his master see Hemacandra, op cit, vv 436 459

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

have been influenced to no small extent by its having been the faith of his grandfather Candragupta, though the Mahāvamsa tells us that, like his father, Aśoka also bestowed alms on the Brahmins for three years<sup>1</sup> His edicts are very broad based, and indicate equal tolerance of all sects Yet the genesis of this psychology might have been as suggested

The fact of Aśoka's having been influenced in his early years by the faith of his grandfather Candragupta gathers strength on the testimony of Edward Thomas that in his Āin-i-Akbarī Abu-l Fazl, the accomplished minister of Akbar, has retained in his notice of the kingdom of Kashmir three very important entries, of which the first establishes "that Aśoka himself first introduced 'Jainism,' eo nomine, into the kingdom of Kashmir"<sup>2</sup> Emphasising the same point the learned scholar further observes that "the leading fact of Aśoka's introduction or recognition of the Jaina creed in Kashmir does not, however, rest upon the sole testimony of the Muhammadan author, but is freely acknowledged in the Brahmanical pages of the Rāja Taranginī—a work which, though finally compiled and put together only in 1148 A D, relies, in this section of its history, upon the more archaic writings of Padma Mihira and Śrī Chavillākāra"<sup>3</sup>

With all this the learned scholar is conscious that Aśoka was not a Jaina throughout his career, otherwise, as he observes, he would have reasonably been claimed by the Jainas as a potent upholder of their faith<sup>4</sup> According to Edward Thomas by and by he became a pervert and ultimately leaned towards Buddhism<sup>5</sup> However, this idea of Aśoka's actual perversion to the Buddhist faith is not easily acceptable What we venture to suggest is this, that as years went on Aśoka came more and more under the influence of the teaching of Buddha, became less and less of a sectarian, and tried to inculcate in his subjects the Dharma which embraced the moral precepts and dogmatic tenets common to other religions, though, as Rev Heras rightly observes, he was "especially influenced by the Jaina doctrines as regards sacredness and inviolability of life"<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> so pi te yeva tīni vassāni bhōjayi —Geiger, op and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Cf Thomas (Edward), op cit, pp 30-31 "When the succession devolved on Aśoka, the son of Janaka's paternal uncle, he abolished the Brahmanical religion and established the Jaina faith"—Jarrett, Āin-i-Akbarī, II, p 382, Wilson, AR, xv, p 10

<sup>3</sup> Thomas (Edward), op cit, p 32 Cf Wilford, AR, ix, pp 96-97

<sup>4</sup> Thomas (Edward), op cit, p 24

<sup>5</sup> Cf ibid

<sup>6</sup> Heras, op cit, p 272 Cf Rock Edicts (I, B), (III, D), (IV, C), (XI, C), etc, Hultzsch, C I I, i, pp 2, 5, 8, 10, etc (new ed)

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Hultzsch takes them to mean "Buddhist monks,"<sup>1</sup> though there is no special reason why such a restriction should be made

"Sramana" simply denotes an ascetic or monk, and the Jainas used the term even before the Buddhists appropriated it. It has been used so in the Greek annals, and this has been, as seen before, confirmed by other scholars also.<sup>2</sup> Thus an ancient vow of the Jaina runs "I take the twelfth vow, the Atithi samvibhāga vrata, by which I promise to give Sramana or Nirgrantha any of the fourteen things which they can accept without blame," etc.<sup>3</sup> Likewise the Kalpa-Sūtra speaks of "the Nirgrantha Sramanas of the present time"<sup>4</sup> Kundakundācārya as well, the earliest Digambara writer of the south, uses the term to signify the monks of his own sect.<sup>5</sup> But over and above all the Buddhists themselves applied the term "Sramana" to the Nirgranthas. For the Anguttara Nikāya says "O Viśākha, there is a class of Sramanas who are called Nirgranthas"<sup>6</sup> That the Jainas used the term prior to the Buddhists is also conclusively proved by the fact that the latter styled themselves "Sākyaputtiya Samanas" as distinguished from the already existing "Niggantha Samanas"<sup>7</sup>

On the other hand, however, when Asoka wanted to speak of Buddhists alone, he has always used the word Samgha. For instance, in Pillar Edict VII, he says "Some (Mahāmātras) were ordered by me to busy themselves with the affairs of the Samgha, likewise others were ordered to busy themselves with the Brahmanas (and) Ājīvikas, others were ordered by me to busy themselves also with the Nirgranthas; others with various (other) sects"<sup>8</sup>

The independent mention of Brahmanas, Ājīvikas and Nirgranthas shows that these were distinct entities altogether different from the Samgha. In all other places the Sramanas are invariably mentioned together with the Brahmanas.<sup>9</sup> The omission of "Sramanas" in this passage can be explained only by the

<sup>1</sup> Hultzsch, op cit, Int, p 1

<sup>2</sup> Cf Rice (Lewis), op cit, p 8

<sup>3</sup> Stevenson (Mrs.), op cit, p 218

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, SBE, xxii, p 297

<sup>5</sup> Cf Bhandarkar, op cit, pp 97-100

<sup>6</sup> Cf Jacobi, SBE, xlv, Int p xvii. Read also Kamta Prasad Jain's interesting article on "The Jaina References in the Buddhist Literature," IHQ, ii, pp 698-709

<sup>7</sup> Cf Rhys Davids, op cit, p 143

<sup>8</sup> Delhi Topra Pillar Edict VII, cf Hultzsch, op cit, p 136 (Z)

<sup>9</sup> See Rock Edicts (III, D), (IV, C) (IX, G), (XI, C), (XIII, G), and Pillar Edict VII (H H), cf Hultzsch, op cit, Int, p 1

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

substitution of Ājīvikas and Nirgranthas, both of whom, as already seen, can be distinguished from the Samgha

As to the attitude of Aśoka towards Jainism, or in fact towards any such other faith, it is indicated in the following words "All men are my children As on my behalf of (my own) children I desire that they may be provided with complete welfare and happiness in this and in the other world, even so is my desire on behalf of all men"<sup>1</sup> Likewise, more specifically, he states "In the same manner I am directing my attention to all classes And all the sects have been honoured by me with honours of various kinds"<sup>2</sup>

Aśoka had his Dharma-Mahāmātra in the north as well as in the south "to supervise Buddhists, Brahmanas and Ājīvikas, Nirgrantha and other sects"<sup>3</sup> His non-sectarian policy is perhaps nowhere better in evidence than in the following

"Whosoever," says the Emperor, "praises his own sect or blames other sects—all (this) out of devotion to his own sect—if he is acting thus, he rather injures his own sect very severely"<sup>4</sup>

Speaking of the Barābar cave inscriptions Smith writes "These records are chiefly of interest as a decisive proof that Aśoka was sincere in his solemn declaration that he honoured all sects"<sup>5</sup> This is no less true of Aśoka's other inscriptions, and although we have no direct evidence as to the state of Jainism in North India under his benevolent rule, the above observations at least serve to reveal the attitude of Candragupta's greatest successor towards the religion he himself had adopted—at least in the evening of his glorious career, if not earlier

Our hypothesis of the hereditary influence of this tradition is also supported by the conversion of Aśoka's grandson, Samprati, by Suhastin to the Jaina faith<sup>6</sup> Before entering into any further discussion about Samprati's enthusiasm for Jainism it may be seen who were the successors of Aśoka Unfortunately, to quote Dr Raychaudhuri, "No Kautilya or Megasthenes has left any account of the later Mauryas It is impossible to reconstruct a detailed history of Aśoka's successor from the scanty data furnished

<sup>1</sup> Separate Rock Edicts Jaugada, I (F G), II (K F), cf Hultzsch, op cit, pp 114-117

<sup>2</sup> Delhi Topra Pillar Edict VI (D E), cf Hultzsch, op cit, p 129, Int, p xlviii.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, Int, p xl

<sup>4</sup> Gurnar Rock Edict XII (H) cf Hultzsch, op cit, p 21

<sup>5</sup> Smith, op cit p 177 Cf Hultzsch, op cit, Int, p xlviii

<sup>6</sup> Cf Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭaparvan, p 69, Bhandarkar, op cit, p 135

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

by one or two inscriptions and a few Brahmanical, Jaina and Buddhist works ”<sup>1</sup>

The Purāṇas themselves do not agree as to who was the successor of Aśoka. It is not an easy task to reconcile the divergent versions of different authorities. However, the reality of Kunāla the son of Aśoka is established by the combined testimony of all,<sup>2</sup> but as to his succession the tradition is not unanimous. Hemacandra tells us under what unhappy circumstances he became blind, and was rendered “unfit to carry on the work of government which was presumably entrusted to his favourite son Samprati, the Jaina Aśoka, who is described by the Jaina and Buddhist writers as the immediate successor of Aśoka ”<sup>3</sup>

The only difficulty that lies in our way in accepting Samprati as the successor of Aśoka is the reality of Daśaratha, whom we have already seen in connection with the Nāgārjunī Hills bestowed by him upon the Ājivikas. The only possible explanation of the difficulty seems to be this, that as the grandsons of Aśoka either both of them ruled at the same time with Samprati as the successor of Aśoka or that Daśaratha has been omitted by both the Buddhist and the Jaina annals. Of the two the first presumption seems to be more correct, considering the unanimous inclusion of Samprati in the Magadhan list.<sup>4</sup>

Thus there is no doubt about the fact that Samprati was one of the Maurya emperors who was great enough to be mentioned by all. As to his enthusiasm for the Jaina church, it can safely be opined that he is one of the leading stars of the Jaina history in the north. In the matter of propagation of the Jaina faith Jaina records speak as highly of Samprati as the Buddhist records do of Aśoka. Smith observes “He (Samprati) is reputed to have been as zealous in promoting the cause of Jainism as Aśoka had been in propagating the religion of Gautama ”<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 220

<sup>2</sup> Cf Pargiter, op cit, pp 28, 70, Cowell and Neil, op cit, p 480. Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā sūt 163, Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 221

<sup>3</sup> Cf Jacobi, op cit, pp 63-64, Cowell and Neil, op cit, p 483, Raychaudhuri, op and loc cit, Bhandarkar op and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Both the Buddhist and the Jaina traditions about Samprati have been referred to by us in the previous note. For the Purāṇic see Pargiter, op cit pp 28, 70. Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 220. “Perhaps the empire was divided between his grandsons, Daśaratha and Samprati.”—Smith op cit, 203

<sup>5</sup> Smith, Oxford History of India, p 117, and n 1. Cf Bhandarkar, op and loc cit, सम्प्रति पितामहद्वयस्यो रघुपतिप्रवृत्तश्चोपायमुहस्तिः शोनाज्जातजातिस्मृतिः जिनालय सपादकोटि सकरोत — Kalpa Sūtra, Subodhikā Tīkā sūt 6, p 163. “Almost all ancient

JAINISM IN ROYAL FAMILIES

About Samprati's zeal for the Jaina church Hemacandra briefly observes as follows "He showed his zeal by causing Jaina temples to be erected over the whole of Jambūdvīpa. During Suhastin's stay at Ujjaini, and under his guidance, splendid religious festivals and processions in honour of the Arhat were celebrated, and great was the devotion manifested by the king and his subjects on this occasion. The example and advice of Samprati induced his vassals to embrace and patronise his creed, so that not only in his kingdom but also in adjacent countries the monks could practise their religion" <sup>1</sup>

What is more important for us to know in connection with Samprati is this—that he sent Jaina missionaries to South India, and that these were of the Śvetāmbara persuasion <sup>2</sup>. To quote Hemacandra "In order to extend the sphere of their (Jaina monks) activities to uncivilised countries, Samprati sent there messengers disguised as Jaina monks. They described to the people the kind of food and other requisites which monks may accept as alms, enjoining them to give such things instead of the usual tax to the revenue collector who would visit them from time to time. Of course these revenue collectors were to be Jaina monks. Having thus prepared the way for them, he induced the superior to send monks to those countries, for they would find it in no way impossible to live there. Accordingly missionaries were sent to the Āndhras and Dramilas, who found everything as the king had told. Thus the uncivilised nations were brought under the influence of Jainism" <sup>3</sup>.

The importance of the Jaina missionaries sent by Samprati to uncivilised countries, as Hemacandra tells us, lies in this—that it is the earliest reference, so far as we know, to contact of the Śvetāmbaras with the south. Hence it is as important as the great migration dealt with in this and the preceding chapter. We particularly call it the Śvetāmbara contact because, as seen before, the Śvetāmbara-Digambara schism in the Jaina church is connected with both the migration and the Suhastin-Mahāgiri tradition. That Jaina temples or monuments of unknown origin are ascribed by the popular voice to Samprati, who is in fact regarded as a Jaina Aśoka"—Smith, Early History of India, p. 202.

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, op cit, p. 69.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Bhandarkar, op and loc cit. About this the Pāṭaliputrakalpa of Jina-prabhasūri observes "In Pāṭaliputra flourished the great King Samprati, son of Kunala, lord of Bharata with its three continents, the great Arhanta who established Vihāras for Śramanas even in non-Āryan countries"—Cf. Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 222.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Jacobi, op and loc cit.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Suhastin was a Śvetāmbara is also evident from the fact that the Digambara Pattāvalies, or genealogies of teachers, do not mention him<sup>1</sup> We are further informed that when Āryamahāgiri saw that Samprati was converted by Suhastin, he withdrew himself to Daśārnabhadra, seeing that "all his hopes of winning the monks to lives of sterner asceticism" were at an end<sup>2</sup> Thus the Śvetāmbara rule triumphed at the court of Samprati

Here ends the importance of Magadha as seen in the light of Jaina history With the end of the Mauryas and the consequent beginning of the Sungas Kalinga becomes the centre of our history With the fall of the sovereign power in Magadha Kalinga more or less succeeds in taking its place Magadha learned to her cost what the powerful Kalinga meant in the time of Khāravēla Fortunately enough, though for a very short time it also plays an equally important part in the history of the Jaina church That after Samprati the Mauryas did not survive long is certain, and whatever survival they must have had seems to be highly shadowy and positively degrading—that the last of them, as seen before and as we shall see in the next chapter, was grievously murdered by his own commander-in-chief

However at present we need not enter into the why and wherefore of the fall of the powerful Mauryas Suffice it to say that the reconquest of Kalinga by the Maurya Aśoka was a great landmark in the history of Magadha and of India It completed the unification of non-Tamil India under the hegemony of Magadha It marked the close of that career of conquest and aggrandisement which was ushered in by Binibisāra's annexation of Anga It opened a new era—an era of peace, of social progress, of religious propaganda and at the same time of political stagnation and, perhaps, of military inefficiency, during which the martial spirit of imperial Magadha had died out for want of exercise The era of Digvijaya was over, the era of Dharmavijaya had begun, and this finally resulted in the disappearance of the Maurya sovereignty over the Magadhan Empire.

<sup>1</sup> Cf Hoernle, JA, xxi pp 57-58, and Klatt, ibid, xi, p 251

<sup>2</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 74 Cf Baroda, History and Literature of Jainism, p 55

CHAPTER IV

Jainism in Kalinga-deśa

THE expression "Jainism in Kalinga-deśa," in the main, embraces the history of the religion during the times of Khāravela. This does not mean that Jainism in Kalinga cannot be traced farther than Khāravela. On the other hand that would be denying what can be clearly deduced from such historical data as the Hāthigumphā inscription, the architectural and sculptural similarity of the monuments standing there to those of the fourth and fifth century B.C., and the most sacred of the Jaina canonical works. With all this it must be admitted that but for the inscription of Khāravela in the Hāthigumphā and of his wife in the Swargapuri cave there is no other decisive ground on which we can base our inferences.<sup>1</sup>

As already seen, after Mahāvīra we have kings of the Śaishunāga, Nanda, Maurya and other dynasties, most of whom were, according to Jaina traditions and history, the followers or supporters of Jaina religion during their régime. No doubt these traditions and history are confirmed by many Jaina and non-Jaina writers, but from the standpoint of a purely historical proof none of these, excepting perhaps Candragupta, can be compared with that great Cedi<sup>2</sup> king, Khāravela, who was, as stated in one of his own inscriptions, a Jaina.

The chief historical proof as to when and how far and how long the Emperor Khāravela ruled, and as to whether he was a Jaina or not, lies in the Hāthigumphā inscription of his time. That he was a great Kalinga king is a fact which cannot be denied, but it is not possible to fix accurately the limits of Kalinga country.

<sup>1</sup> Let it be clear from the very beginning that it is really not desirable and practically impossible to trace out chronologically the progress of Jainism in Kalinga. All that is required is to lay our hands on whatever historical monuments, small or great, ancient or modern, that are available at present, and draw our inferences from them, keeping in view as far as possible the contemporary historical atmosphere of the time.

<sup>2</sup> We know the Cedis as the well-known Vedic and classical ruling family which seems to have migrated into Orissa from Mahākosala, where they are also found in later history. "It is certain that one of the seats of the Cedis was near about Orissa in very ancient times"—J B O R S, xii, p. 223.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

It was under him that on the downfall of the Mauryan Empire Kalinga revolted and became an independent kingdom. The boundaries of Kalinga, the territory under the Eastern Ghāts lying along the coast of the Bay of Bengal on the north of Telingāna, seem to have been uncertain<sup>1</sup>. The strip of land that fringes the Bay of Bengal, extending from the Godavary towards the north, was anciently known as Kalinga. Roughly speaking, it may be taken as comprising the part of the country which we now call Orissa and Ganjam.

Khāravēla's inscription "is one of the most celebrated and also one of the most perplexing of all the historical monuments in India"<sup>2</sup>. Among the followers of Lord Mahāvira, Khāravēla's is the most ancient name of a ruling potentate that can be found in an inscription. Considering the chronology of post-Mauryan times and the ancient glory of Jainism his is the most important, and the only inscription yet discovered in the country. No doubt it is unparalleled from the viewpoint of Jain history, but unquestionable is its importance from even the standpoint of the political history of India.

In the words of Sir Ashutosh Mookerji "In the region of epigraphy, that branch of historical research which has removed (the impression of) the seals written in forgotten and mysterious letters and unlocked the gates of the past, our attention is arrested by the Hāthugumphā inscription of Emperor Khāravēla. The inscription, which was recorded in the second century before the Christian era, embodies a biography of the king of Orissa from his infancy to the thirteenth year of his reign and the thirty-seventh year of his life. The inscription is chiselled on the face of a rock, which has been known and studied for a century since its first discovery by Sterling in 1825, and the numerous historical data furnished thereby have been recognised as of first-rate importance, as they include references to the contemporary king of Magadha, the Greek king of Mathura, the fortresses of Gorathagiri (Barābar Hills) and Rājagṛha, the Gangetic places at Pātaliputra and King Sātakarni of the Deccan. Numerous and fruitful have been the consequential studies based on this reinvestigation of what, in the long array of Brāhmī inscriptions, can be placed, next to the edicts of Aśoka, in the same category only with the fourth-century inscription of Samudragupta"<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> CHI, I, p. 601

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p. 534

<sup>3</sup> J B O R S, x, pp. 9-10

PORTION OF A FRIEZE IN THE OUTER FRAMING OF THE RĀṆACUMHĀ CUVAVACRI

From Altaia II: Archaia (Oriental)

See page 155

JAINACUMHĀ KHAVAVACRI

From Altaia II: Archaia (Oriental)

See page 151

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DESA

In India, Benares and Puri are the two most important places of pilgrimage, famous alike from sanctity and historic associations treasured up in the nation's undying remembrance. It is here that the whole nation's fervent devotion has manifested itself in many a form, it is here that the heart and intellect of the nation have proceeded on parallel lines.

We have reason to believe that Orissa, now "the garden of Hinduism, with Jagannath its Jerusalem,"<sup>1</sup> was an important seat of Buddhist and Jaina influence from the third century B C to the eighth or ninth century A D. Buddhism began to exercise its influence at the conquest of Kalinga by Aśoka, the great Maurya king in 262 B C<sup>2</sup>, but with his death the Mauryan Empire rapidly declined, and Pushyamitra, the royal chaplain (purohit) to the Mauryas and the mighty champion of the Brahmanical reaction which set in after the triumph of Buddhism during Aśoka's rule, usurped the royal throne and gave a severe blow to the Buddhist faith in India.<sup>3</sup> With all this he could not enjoy his dominions unchallenged. Side by side with the great Āndhra dynasty in the south another great power that arose in the wake of the Mauryan Empire was the illustrious Cedi dynasty under Mahāmeghavāhana Khāravela, with its home in the lowlands of the eastern coast. This dynasty proved a good set-back to the Brahmanical reaction of the north.<sup>4</sup>

Thus in the second century B C all the three religions—Brahmanism, Jainism and Buddhism—were represented by Kalinga, while the middle one enjoyed the privilege of being the State religion. Hsuen-Tsiang, the Chinese pilgrim who visited Kalinga some time between A D 629 and 645, testifies to the numerical strength of Jainism, and describes the territory as a stronghold of the Jaina faith. He tells us that there were "very many unbelievers of different sorts, the most numerous being the Nirgranthas (Nī-kin followers)." <sup>5</sup>

This is a clear advance of the Jaina faith from Magadha, the land of its birth, into south-eastern India as far as Kalinga. This progress of the Jainas can be traced out, and can be proved as a matter of fact, from two documents at Khandagiri in Orissa of the great King Khāravela and his wife. He governed the east coast

<sup>1</sup> J A S B, xxviii, Nos. I to V (1859), p. 186.

<sup>2</sup> Ganguly, Orissa and her Remains—Ancient and Medieval, p. 17.

<sup>3</sup> Mazumdar, Hindu History, p. 686 (2nd ed.)

<sup>4</sup> CH I, i, pp. 518, 534.

<sup>5</sup> Beal, Si Yu-Ki, ii, p. 208.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

of India from c 183 B C to c 152 B C—that is, in the first half of the second century B C<sup>1</sup> This is also confirmed by certain other caves and ruins of temples lying on either Udayagiri or Khandagiri Hills Both these hills are situated at a distance of about five miles to the north-west of Bhubanesvara, and are separated by a ravine forming a continuous line with the road from Bhubanesvara Furthermore the hill tribes, who now occupy a degraded position among the servile castes, are mentioned in several places in the Angas and the Upāngas, the oldest sacred literature of the Jainas, where their language is referred to as one of the tongues of the barbarians (Mleccha)<sup>2</sup>

Of the documents just mentioned the first and the largest is the inscription of Khāravela, which opens with the usual benedictory formula of the Jainas It proves that Jainism entered Orissa and probably became the State religion within one hundred years from its last prophet, Mahāvīra The second and the smaller one in the Swargapuri cave asserts that Khāravela's chief queen caused a temple and a cave to be prepared for the Sramanas of Kalinga

Before we take up a detailed review of the Hāthigumphā inscription we shall first see what little can be had from the neighbouring ruins According to the District Gazetteer it seems certain that during the rule of the Emperor Aśoka a number of Jainas settled in the district, for the sandstone hills of Udayagiri and Khandagiri are covered with their hermitage caves, some of which bear inscriptions in the Brāhmī character of the Maurya age They all appear to have been made for the religious use of the Jainas, and to have been used by Jaina monks for many a century<sup>3</sup>

It may be noticed here that both the Buddhist and the Jaina period of architectural growth in Orissa is characterised by cave temples<sup>4</sup> We say both the Buddhist and the Jaina influence because some of the Khandagiri caves, like the Rānigumphā and the Anantagumphā, are conspicuous for Buddhist symbols like the Bo-tree, a Buddha Trishūla, a votive Stūpa, the characteristic Swastika mark, and so on<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> J B O R S, xiii, p 244

<sup>2</sup> They have been identified with Suari of Pliny and Sabara of Ptolemy For the reference of the Jaina literature see Weber, J A, xix, pp 65, 69, xx, pp 25, 368, 374

<sup>3</sup> B D G P, p 24

<sup>4</sup> Ganguly, op cit, p 31

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, pp 40, 57

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DESA

This influence is noticeable from the fifth century B C. down to the fifth or sixth century A D. This is well corroborated by the fact that both the Khandagiri and Udayagiri Hills, otherwise called Khandagiri, are honeycombed with caves or cells, of which forty-four are in Udayagiri, nineteen in Khandagiri and three in Nilgiri.<sup>1</sup> Their number, age and carvings make these caves the most interesting in Eastern India. They were inhabited in ancient times by the Bauddha and Jaina hermits, or Sramanas, and many of them appear, from palæographic grounds, to have been excavated in the second or third century B C. As Mr Ganguly says "We think we shall not be far from the truth in dating some of the caves even in the 4th or 5th century B C—that is, before the period of the Hāthigumphā inscription—for the locality where the caves were excavated must have had some sort of previous sanctity preserved in the eyes of the co-religionists."<sup>2</sup>

It is almost a hopeless task to fix with certainty any dates for the caves, and intermingling of Buddhist and Jaina influences has rendered it more so. On the walls of the cells are usually carved the figures of Buddhist legends and of the Jaina Tirthankaras in basso-relievo. Elaborate pillars are noticed in the Jaina Gumpha on Khandagiri Hill. The peculiarity of almost all these caves is that a bench runs round the three sides of the front verandah, the height varying from 1 foot to 1 foot 6 inches. The two walls of the verandah are so hollowed out on the top as to look like cupboards. These were meant to hold the scanty necessaries of life of the Buddhist or Jaina monks. Further details on the architectural side of the caves we shall note in the chapter entitled "Jaina Art in the North." For the present we shall stop with a remark of Mr Ganguly that "the caves present a very simple, though massive face, consistent with the lives of their past inmates."<sup>3</sup>

Among the Khandagiri caves the Satghara or Satbakhra, Navamuni and Ananta are the most important. The first two bear evident traces of Jaina influences,<sup>4</sup> and the last of Bauddha, because of the Swastikas and pointed Trisūlas carved on its back wall. Anyhow, below the first Swastika there is a small standing image, now much worn out, which, according to the District Gazetteer,

<sup>1</sup> B D G P, p. 251

<sup>2</sup> Ganguly, op cit, p. 82

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p. 84

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Chakravarti (Mon Mohan), Notes on the Remains in Dhauti and in the Caves of Udayagiri and Khandagiri, p. 8

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

a rude carving on the verandah wall, which is unique in having the inside benched. Above the benches is carved a series of twenty-four Tirthankaras, including Pārśva, under the seven hoods of a snake, and ending with Mahāvira. In this group too, Pārśva, instead of being placed before Mahāvira as the twenty-third saint, is given a position of honour in the centre of the back wall. The base of the fifteenth saint is hidden by a masonry structure rising from the floor, on which are placed three well-carved steatite images of Ādinātha. The general execution of the images in this group is finer than in the adjoining cave.<sup>1</sup>

Of the same date as the Navamuni cave we have an inscription of Uddyotakesari in Lālatendu-kesari's cave or lion gate. According to the District Gazetteer it is a two-storeyed cave called after King Lālatendu Kesari, and the rooms on the first floor contain some carvings of Jain saints, of whom Pārśvanātha is the most important.<sup>2</sup> It is incised on the back wall of the cave, at a height of about 30 or 40 feet from the floor of the cave, above a group of images of the Digambara sect.<sup>3</sup>

The inscription does not seem to be well preserved, and hence a few words are missing in the last line. As it is, it tells us that "in the year five of the victorious reign of the illustrious Uddyotakesari, on the illustrious Kumāra mountain,<sup>4</sup> decayed tanks and decayed temples were caused to shine, (and) at that place the images of the twenty-four Tirthankaras were set up. At the time of the dedication Jasanandi in the place (temple?) of the illustrious Pārśyanātha (Pārśvanātha)."<sup>5</sup>

It becomes apparent from what is laid down in the inscription that Uddyotakesari was either a Jain by religion or at least a great protector of the Jain faith. We have no certain grounds to identify this Uddyotakesari of the inscription with any historical personage. It may safely be said that the history of Orissa is wrapped in darkness,

<sup>1</sup> B D G P, op and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. Cf Chakravarti (Mon Mohan), op cit, p. 19

<sup>3</sup> It may be that at the time of Khāravela the great schism, which was followed by the division of the Jain community into the Digambaras and Svetāmbaras, had not fully manifested itself, but, as we have seen before, in later history the former were predominant in the south. This is clear from the Jain caves at Ellora, Badami and such other places.

<sup>4</sup> We learn from line two of the inscription that the ancient name of Khandagiri is Kumāraparvata. The Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela mentions Kumāraparvata as the ancient name of Udayagiri. The twin hills seem to have been known as the Kumāra-Kumāri-parvata up to the tenth or eleventh century A.D.

<sup>5</sup> E.I., xiii, p. 167

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

more or less, from A.D. 200—i.e. the time of the Āndhras to the beginning of the seventh century A.D.

However, according to the Mādālā Pāñji, or palm-leaf chronicles of the temple of Jagannatha, Orissa was under the Keśari or Lion dynasty from the seventh to the twelfth century A.D.<sup>1</sup>, but it would be going beyond our period to trace in detail the Keśari dynasty. Nevertheless the number and magnificence of the remains at Bhubanesvara and elsewhere are evidence of a wealthy and highly civilised kingdom. These stately temples show the hold which Hinduism had obtained in Orissa by this time, and no further trace is found of Buddhism, which according to tradition was introduced a few centuries earlier. At the same time Jainism appears to have continued to retain its hold on the affections of the people or to have had a rival, for in the cave at Khandagiri and Udayagiri we find inscriptions and rock-cut images of Jaina saints or deities dating back to the same period.

Coming to the caves in the Udayagiri Hills we find that they are the most important caves in Orissa from the point of view of architecture and sculpture, and of them the Rāngumphā or the Rāni Nur is the best known. It is the most important of all, and in it elaborately carved friezes represent various scenes of human activities. The three friezes and the carvings on the lower-storey rooms naturally attract special attention. According to the District Gazetteer, "the scenes, though mostly mutilated, clearly indicate the procession of a saint through a town during some religious festival, when persons would be looking out from their houses for a glimpse of him, when horses would be led, elephants be ridden and guards be in attendance, while the people, both male and female, would follow the saint with folded hands, and women standing or kneeling would present him with fruits or cakes on plates and ask his blessing."<sup>2</sup>

The frieze on the upper main wing, which is nearly 60 feet long, is the most interesting. In fact no frieze in Indian caves has excited more discussion among archaeologists. Various explanations have been given of these scenes, which are also briefly repeated in the Ganeśa cave. The editor of the District Gazetteer believes that in this Pārśvanātha appears to be the most honoured of the Tīrthankaras.<sup>3</sup> Taking just a brief survey of the life of Pārśva

<sup>1</sup> Cf. B D G P, p. 25

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p. 254

<sup>3</sup> Ibid Cf. Chakravarti (Mon Mohan), op cit, pp. 9-10

SWARGAPURICAVES L.D.A. AGIRI

from N<sup>o</sup> 1a The Arinagat of Oy 13

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

one of them being in the name of Kūdepsīri, "the king, master of Kalinga,"<sup>1</sup> and the other in the name of the Prince Vadukha.<sup>2</sup> The first is incised on the front wall, while the other is on the side wall of the lower storey. According to Mr Banerji the characters of all the three inscriptions "are slightly later than those of the Hāthugumphā inscription of Khāravela."<sup>3</sup>

These fragmentary evidences tend to prove the existence of an influential Jaina dynasty which ruled over Kalinga. It is not known how long this dynasty lasted or by what other dynasty it was succeeded, but according to the District Gazetteer "it is possible that in the 2nd century A D Kalinga, including Orissa, acknowledged the suzerainty of the Āndhras, to whose active influence the introduction of Buddhism may perhaps be ascribed. The Tibetan chronicles have preserved a tradition that the king of Oṭisha was converted to Buddhism, with 1000 of his subjects, by Nāgārjuna, who is believed to have flourished about A D 200 at the court of the Āndhras. The conversion of the people must naturally have been facilitated by this royal example."<sup>4</sup>

With these historical monuments at our disposal it will not be too much to say that the family of the great queen on her father's side also must have been under the Jaina church. As we shall see later on, the party with whom Khāravela, the mighty emperor, joined hands on matrimonial grounds must have been one belonging to the family of a great ruler of those days.

From all that we have seen up till now one thing is very characteristic of these hills, and this must be duly emphasised. In the words of the District Gazetteer, "several caves in Khandagiri contain images of Tirthankaras which, even if of a later date than the caves, are interesting as examples of mediæval Jaina hagiology, while if contemporaneous, they are the oldest existing specimens of Jaina Tirthankaras and their consorts. The prominence given to Pārśva, whether among the images or by the use of his symbol, the serpent-hood, is curious, for in other existing remains Mahāvīra is the greatest of all the saints. The preference for Pārśva may point to the early age of the remains, and if so, they are unique specimens of Jaina iconography. So little is known about this great preacher who lived, according to Jaina chronicles, 200 years earlier than Mahāvīra, or about 750 B C, and whose law recognised but four

<sup>1</sup> E I, xiii, p 160

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p 150

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p 161

<sup>4</sup> B D G P, p 25

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

vows and allowed an under and upper garment, that the sculptured record contained in these caves, scanty as it is, cannot but be welcome to the antiquarians " <sup>1</sup>

This is what we can glean from the sacred remains of the country which has been spoken of as the land of the "blessed adorned with all the virtues," <sup>2</sup> and as "the bestower of heaven and salvation" <sup>3</sup> It was here that, long before the Christian era, Jainism and Buddhism gained ascendancy, and exercised a great influence on Hinduism or, properly called, Brahmanism It is this very land of the Rshis which experienced alternate cycles of the Jaina or the Buddhist predominance, and hence it seems difficult and sometimes impossible to lay down with absolute certainty that such and such cave is of Jaina or Bauddha origin on the flimsy grounds of certain symbols or some characteristic architectural designs This becomes specially so when, in those days both the faiths had many a similar symbol—namely, "a Swastika," "a tree," and so on After all, whatever may be the nature of such historical data, it is certain that the union of Brahmanism with Buddhism and Jainism is marked by a great upheaval in every department of thought and art, and architecture, with sculpture, could not escape its influence

With these preliminary remarks we shall pass on to the Hāthigumphā inscription, but before we do that a passing reference to the Jaina temple built on the summit of the Khandagiri Hill by the Mahrattas will not be out of place The temple is about a century old and was built towards the close of the eighteenth century <sup>4</sup> As usual with other Jaina temples, it occupies a grand site and commands a beautiful view. Referring to this small temple the learned author of The Antiquities of Orissa says "The sanctuary contains a standing figure of Mahāvīrā in black stone, placed on a wooden chair The temple was built by Manju Chaudhuri and his nephew, Bhavām Dādu of Cuttack, a Jaina merchant of the Digambara sect" <sup>5</sup> Within the sanctuary there is also a masonry platform, with a small raised wall behind, in which are embedded five images of Jaina saints Behind the temple at a slightly lower level there is another terrace, on which lie scattered scores of votive Stūpas, indicating the existence of an older temple <sup>6</sup>

Finally coming to the Hāthigumphā we find that it is a natural

<sup>1</sup> B D G P, p 266

<sup>2</sup> Vana Parva, sec. 114, vv 4-5

<sup>3</sup> Ibid

<sup>4</sup> Brahma Purāna, 26th chapter

<sup>5</sup> Mitra, op cit, p 35

<sup>6</sup> B D G P, p 264

JAINA TEMPLE AT KHANDAGIRI
from Matru, The Antiquities of Orissa

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

cavern, very little improved or enlarged by art. It is on the southern face of the Udayagiri Hills, which is the northern part of that low range of hills called Khandagiri, situated at a distance of about three miles from Bhubanesvara, in the Puri district of Orissa. Though not important from an artistic and architectural point of view, it is the most important of all the caves in the locality by reason of its containing a long inscription recording the autobiography of a king of Kalinga "on the overhanging brow of the cavern" <sup>1</sup>

The record is incised partly in front and partly on the roof of the cave. It throws considerable light on the history of India in the second century B.C., "when the empire of Candragupta and Asoka had crumbled into decay, when the usurper Pushyamitra was ruling over the fragments of the Mauryan empire, and the Āndhras of Southern India, having acquired power, had advanced northwards and had perhaps conquered Malva" <sup>2</sup>

The inscription begins with an invocation to the Arhats and the Siddhas in the Jaina style <sup>3</sup>. As believed by Fleet, <sup>4</sup> it is not a version of the acts done by Khāravela for the promotion of the Jaina faith, but it is, after all, a secular record, and records all performances of King Khāravela, who belonged to the Jaina faith up to the thirteenth year of his reign or thirty-seventh year of his life.

Following the inscription as it is, we find that its language may be described as Apabhramśa Prākṛt, with traces of Ardha Māgadhī and Jaina Prākṛtisms, and that it was incised in the thirteenth year of Khāravela's reign. This thirteenth year of his reign coincides with the thirty-seventh year of his life, because, after completing his fifteenth year, Khāravela became a Yuvarāja and performed the Vedic coronation called the Mahārājya-abhisheka as soon as he completed his twenty-fourth year. The Abhisheka of Khāravela shows that Jainism did not interfere with the national constitutional rites of the orthodox type <sup>5</sup>.

Over and above the exact information that this inscription gives us about Khāravela, and about some of the principal events of his political career, it gives us a clue to more or less accurately fix the date of this great emperor. But for this inscription there

<sup>1</sup> Ganguly, op cit, p. 47

<sup>2</sup> J B O R S, III, p. 488

<sup>3</sup> नमो खराहानं नमो खराहानं

etc — Ibid, IV, p. 397, and XIII, p. 222

<sup>4</sup> J R A S 1910, p. 825

<sup>5</sup> J B O R S, III, pp. 431, 438

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DESA

passage which refers to both Demetrios and Menander has been interpreted by the best authorities to apply to Demetrios in respect of the extensive conquests'. Above all, the retreat of Demetrios from India to oppose his rival Eucratides in Bactria is a fact that largely helps the identification, because, according to our inscription, the Greek king, without any action on the part of Khāravēla against him, retreated and left Mathura. Thus it seems to be certain that Khāravēla's time is between Demetrios and Menander.

Coming to the Greek history we find that the very success of Demetrios appears to have caused his downfall. As a direct consequence of his victories the centre of his dominions was shifted beyond the borders of Bactria proper. The homeland, however, was not content to degenerate into a mere dependency. A revolt ended in the establishment of a separate kingdom under Eucratides, a leader of great vigour and ability, about whom written history has hardly anything to say.<sup>2</sup> His recognition as king took place with the accession of Mithradates I to the throne of Parthia. As Mithradates succeeded his brother Phraates I about 171 B.C., we may accept Von Gutschmid's date of 175 B.C. as approximately correct for Eucratides.<sup>3</sup> The beginning of his reign was stormy. Demetrios, who was now king of India—the country round about the Indus—not of Bactria, and who was therefore one of his most natural foes, had to retreat from India on account of the troubles raised in Bactria by the rival Eucratides. This retreat of Demetrios is placed by the historians of Bactria about 175 B.C.,<sup>4</sup> and this, with the siege of Gorathaguri and Rājagṛha, coincides with the eighth year of Khāravēla—c. 175 B.C. The first year of Khāravēla would thus be c. 183 B.C., and the date of the inscription about 170 B.C.

Leaving aside this reference to the Greek king, Demetrios, there is another ground on which we can approximately fix the date of Khāravēla. An Āndhra king, Śātakarni, the Lord of the West, is actually mentioned in the inscription as Khāravēla's rival,<sup>5</sup> and he can safely be identified with the Śātakarni of the Nānāghāt inscriptions, because on epigraphical grounds both the Nānāghāt inscription of

<sup>1</sup> See Meyer (Eduard), E B, vii, p. 982 (11th ed.), and Rawlinson, Parthia (The Story of the Nations), p. 65.

<sup>2</sup> CH I, i, p. 446.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Meyer (Eduard), op cit, ix, p. 880.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. J B O R S, iv, p. 398, and xiii, p. 226.

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DESA

This King Vena is a Vedic personality,<sup>1</sup> and according to Manu<sup>2</sup> King Vena had the whole earth (country) under his rule. Speaking about him Mr Jayaswal says "It is noteworthy that the Padma Purāna also says that Vena began his rule well, but subsequently he became a Jaina. From the Hāthigumphā inscription we get an indirect confirmation of the Padma Purāna, in so much that Vena, who has not got throughout a good reputation in the Brahmanical tradition, had a good reputation amongst the Jainas as an ideal king. If amongst the Jainas at the period when the inscription was written Vena had been regarded as a bad king towards the end of his career, the comparison would not have been adopted in praise of Khāravela. It is significant that the only defect in Vena, the Brahmins found, was of Jaina characteristics—that is, he did not recognise caste. Presumably the tradition disparaging Vena is later and post Jainism."<sup>3</sup>

Coming to the third line we find, as already stated, that after the twenty-fourth year was complete Khāravela obtained "Māhārājābhisekanam" in the third generation of the Kalinga dynasty, and with many other repairs got an embankment made to the lake of Khibīra Rshi in the capital of Kalinga.<sup>4</sup>

With the fourth line of the inscription begins the political life of Khāravela. In the beginning of the line it is said that Khāravela tried to please his teeming population of three and a half millions.<sup>5</sup> There is nothing particular to wonder at this figure. We know from Asoka's Rock Edict XIII that against Asoka's forces Kalinga lost 150,000 soldiers as captives of war, 100,000 were slain and "many times as many died."<sup>6</sup> This comes to about two and a half lacs as the total number of casualties. Now according to Scharnhorst's estimate every fifteenth soul of the population could take up arms against a foreign invasion, and hence the population of Asoka's time comes to about thirty-eight lacs.<sup>7</sup> A century after this, in the time of Khāravela, it is quite likely that it was three and a half millions after the loss occasioned by the Maurya conquest and rule. Accepting the same figure Mr Vincent Smith says "Knowing as we do that the Mauryas and their predecessors

<sup>1</sup> Rigveda, x, 123

<sup>2</sup> Manu, chap. x, 66-67

<sup>3</sup> J B O R S, xiii, pp. 224, 225

<sup>4</sup> Cf. ibid, iv, pp. 397-398, and xiii, p. 225

<sup>5</sup> Cf. ibid, iv, p. 398, and xiii, p. 226

<sup>6</sup> Bühler, E I, ii, p. 471

<sup>7</sup> Cf. J B O R S, iii, p. 440

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

maintained a permanent census, there is no reason to distrust the figures ”<sup>1</sup>

Before we go any further a peep into the history of the times will not be out of place here. In the words of Dr Barnett “After the death of Aśoka the Maurya empire rapidly decayed, and the neighbouring rulers were left free to indulge in their ambition and enlarge their boundaries. Among these was a certain Simuka, who in the last quarter of the third century B.C. established the powerful Sātavāhana or Sātakarni dynasty, which ruled the Telugu country for nearly five centuries. In his reign or in the reign of his immediate successor, his younger brother Kṛṣṇa (vernacularly Kanha), the Āndhra empire spread westward to at least 74° longitude, and possibly even to the Arabian Sea.<sup>2</sup> Under these early Sātavāhana kings the boundaries of the Āndhra dominions were enlarged so as to include a great part, if not the whole, of Vīdarbhā (Berar), the central provinces and Hyderabad ”<sup>3</sup>

“But the Sungas and the Āndhras were not the only powers which at this period were contending for mastery in the region now known as Central India. The Hāthigumphā inscription shows that c. 180 B.C. Khāravela, king of Kalinga, appeared in the field as a new combatant ”<sup>4</sup>

Khāravela's ambition to secure his country a dictating voice in the political affairs of his times brought him into conflict with his neighbours, who were a paramount power in the Deccan. In his second year he sent a large army to the west in defiance of Sātakarni, the Āndhra monarch.<sup>5</sup> This monarch was a king of the dynasty called the Sātavāhanas according to the inscriptional records of the family themselves, and the Āndhras (Āndhrabhrtyas) according to the Purāṇas.<sup>6</sup> These were the unsubdued peoples on the southern borders of the Mauryan dominions, and their home was on the coastal region of the Madras Presidency, between the rivers Godavary and Kṛṣṇa.

<sup>1</sup> Smith, J R A S, 1918, p. 545

<sup>2</sup> This is indicated by the inscriptions at Nasik (No. 1144) and at Nānāghāt, fifty miles north-west of Poona (No. 1114)

<sup>3</sup> C H I, i, pp. 599, 600

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., p. 600

<sup>5</sup> The Āndhra king alluded to can only be Śrī-Sātakarni, No. 8 of the Purāṇic list, who is commemorated by a defaced but happily inscribed relief image at Nānāghāt, a pass leading from the Konkan to the ancient town of Junar in the Poona district, Bombay.—Bühler, A S W I, v, p. 59

<sup>6</sup> Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kāś Age, pp. 36 ff

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

Talking about the original home and the caste of the Sātavāhana princes Mr Bakhle says "In the inscription of Khāravela the Sātavāhanas are said to be in the west of Kalunga, in the Jaina legends Paithān, in the Naizam's dominions, is called their capital; in the version of the origin of the dynasty given in the Kathāsari-sāgara the founder of the dynasty is said to have been born at Paithān

Majority of the inscriptions of the Sātavāhanas are to be found at Nasik, their earliest inscription is at Nānāghāt, in Western India, their earliest coins are also found in Western India

It will thus appear that all the circumstances point to Western India as the original home of the Sātavāhanas. . . The evidence of the Jaina legends about the caste of the Sātavāhana princes is conflicting and of very little credence One traditional account says that the Sātavāhana was born from a virgin aged four years, another traces his descent to a Yaksha The epigraphic evidence, however, points definitely to the Sātavāhana as Brahman" <sup>1</sup>

The result of Khāravela's expedition to the west was that Sātakarni was not defeated, and that he had to be content with the Mūshika capital, which was taken by him to help the Kāśyapa Kshatriyas <sup>2</sup> The Mūshikas were very probably the subordinate ally of Sātakarni, and it appears that the Mūshika country must have been between Paithān and Gondwānā As Kosal came next to Orissa (north-west), the Mūshika land must have been contiguous to the west

Nothing particular has the fifth line to tell us but the fact that in the third year Khāravela was well versed in the science of music, with shows of dancing, singing, and so on <sup>3</sup>

Line six is rather important It is here that we get some reference to the Nanda era It first tells us that after the march against Sātakarni and Mūshikas the next campaign of Khāravela was carried into Western India In the fourth year of his reign he humbled the Rāstrikas of the Maratha country and Bhojakas of Berar, both feudatories of the Āndhras <sup>4</sup>

Thus on two occasions, according to the inscriptional record, did Khāravela invade the Āndhra dominions in the Deccan. In his second year he sent a large army of horses, elephants, foot-

<sup>1</sup> J B B R 4 S (New Series), iii, pp 49-52

<sup>2</sup> J B O R S, iv, p 398, and xiii, p 226

<sup>3</sup> Cf ibid

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, iv, p 399.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

namely, the date of Khāravēla. A literal translation of the line, with a portion of the previous line, made in the light of the latest readings of Jayaswal, which we have adopted for our purpose here, is as follows: "In the eighth year he (Khāravēla) having got stormed the Gorathagiri (fortress) of great enclosure (lit 'wall,' 'barrier') by a great army causes pressure around Rājagraha (lays siege to Rājagraha). On account of this report (uproar), occasioned by the acts of valour (that is, the capture of Gorathagiri fortress and the siege of Rājagraha), the great King Demet(rios) drawing in army and transport or covering himself with his army and vehicles retreated to abandon Mathura"<sup>1</sup>

Thus we see that in the eighth year of his reign Khāravēla invaded Magadha. This shows that he had not only become independent but also aggressive. He reaches as far as the Barābar Hills (Gorathagiri), on the old route from Gaya to Pātaliputra. Hearing of this advance on the part of Khāravēla, Demetrios, the king of Indians, beat a retreat, in the result giving up Mathura, and whose invasion in the interior and retreat from India are mentioned by historians of the Bactrian history.<sup>2</sup>

Most probably Pushyamitra was on the throne at that time. According to the Purānas, Pushyamitra reigned for thirty-six years,<sup>3</sup> and according to Mr Vincent Smith, Pushyamitra dethroned Brhadratha, the last Maurya king, in 185 B.C.<sup>4</sup> According to Mr Jayaswal this event took place in 188 B.C.,<sup>5</sup> and hence Pushyamitra must have ruled from 185 to 149 B.C. or 188 to 152 B.C.

There is hardly anything of importance in line nine of the inscription. It talks of some gifts of land to Brahmins, and thereby supports the system of collective grant of land to Brahmins prevalent during the Hindu rule.<sup>6</sup> As we have already remarked about the Vedic coronation of Khāravēla, here also the mere fact that he was a Jaina in no way interfered with the national constitutional rites of the orthodox type. Another inference that we might draw from this is that the original organisation of the Āryans had some of its permanent effects on the social life of the people irrespective of the religion to which they belonged. Jainism and Buddhism of

<sup>1</sup> J B O R S, iv, pp 378, 379, and xiii, pp 228, 229

<sup>2</sup> Meyer (Eduard), op cit, ix, p 880

<sup>3</sup> Cf Pargiter, op cit, p 70

<sup>4</sup> Smith, Early History of India, p 204

<sup>5</sup> J B O R S, xiii, p 248

<sup>6</sup> Cf ibid, iv, p 400, and xiii, p 229

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

Mahāvīra's time might have been direct revolutions against the prevalent form of Brahmanism, but that real or superstitious respect for Brahmans and their social claims over other castes hardly suffered in any way from these revolutions

No doubt in such a case as this much depended upon the broad-minded outlook of the person concerned, and that, like Aśoka, Khāravēla was also the emperor who was always above any kind of blind religious fervour about his own or about any particular faith, and, like his predecessor's edicts, he has this inscription to prove his aloofness from any sort of petty-minded bigotry. Tolerance was his chief characteristic, and he seems to have been a magnificent ruler, of liberal tendencies, and styles himself "a worshipper of men of all sects" <sup>1</sup>

Coming to the tenth line we find that Khāravēla got built the royal residence Mahāvijaya (the palace of victory), at the cost of thirty-eight hundred thousand coins <sup>2</sup>. After this he, "with the policy of war, peace and conciliation," causes departure for Northern India (Bhārata-varsha) for further conquests, and obtains the precious things of those who have been invaded upon <sup>3</sup>. It should be noted here that the third division of Hindu foreign policy—namely, "Bheda"—that is, "dissension"—is omitted here, probably as considered too low and not honourable for the policy of Khāravēla <sup>4</sup>.

The next line is also not very important for our purpose here. It talks of some Manda (throne) being ploughed down by Khāravēla with a plough drawn by big asses <sup>5</sup>. The throne, it is said, was erected by some bad (perverse) king—bad because the king's religious heresy must be connected with Jainism. The throne referred to here must be a decorated stand or a covered throne. For the identification of the "bad king" there is nothing in the inscription to help us. Furthermore, Khāravēla breaks the lead-bodied figure (or figures) or the assemblage of leaden bodies made a century and thirteen years ago, or in the year 118 <sup>6</sup>. With the reading 118 years before the eleventh year of Khāravēla the date of these "lead figures" would be 285 B.C., but if we take the other reading the year would be in the Nanda era, as in line six, and would be equal to 345 B.C.

<sup>1</sup> मन्व-पार्श्व-पूजको —J B O R S, iv, p. 408

<sup>2</sup> Cf ibid, iv, p. 400

<sup>3</sup> Cf ibid, and xiii, p. 280

<sup>4</sup> Cf ibid

<sup>5</sup> Ibid

<sup>6</sup> Ibid, p. 282

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

The first incident is about the Apa-Rāja ("bad king"), and there seems some form of aggression on the part of the said king, but the latter incident is inexplicable. That the images were not other than Jaina images seems certain, because there is no such reference as that, and because that would contradict the generous policy of Khāravela. As we shall see in line seventeen, Khāravela was a respecter of all religions,<sup>1</sup> and therefore it seems possible that these must be images representing ugly caricatures of some Jaina Tīrthankaras.

Over and above these two incidents the line tells us that Khāravela causes consternation amongst the kings of Uttarāpatha (northern Punjab and the frontier countries)

Again, the twelfth line is also very important for our purpose. It is important not only from the standpoint of this chapter on Khāravela, but it is also a great support to some such problems as "the Nandas and their faith," "Jainism and the Nanda dynasty," "the Antiquity of Jainism," "the Image worship among the Jains," and so on. To some of these problems we have already referred in our previous chapters. The remaining ones will be dealt with during the course of this and other chapters that are to follow, and hence to refrain from undue repetition we need not take up any discussions here. For the present we shall be satisfied with a literal translation of the line, with a portion of the previous line, which goes as follows:

"In the twelfth year (he) causes consternation amongst the kings of Uttarāpatha and causing great panic amongst the peoples of Magadha (he) makes his elephants enter the Su-gāṅgeya, and he makes the king of Magadha, Bahasati-mitra, bow at his feet. (He) brings home the image known as the Jina of Kalinga which had been carried away by King Nanda (and) the home Ratnas as recaptures as the riches of Anga and Magadha."<sup>2</sup>

Thus the countries of the north-western frontiers are subdued and the king of Magadha is made to pay homage at his feet. Furthermore it seems from this that King Nanda of Magadha had taken away some Jaina image to Pātaliputra which Khāravela had brought back to Orissa along with other trophies from Anga and Magadha after the defeat of Bahasati-mitra. At first sight it seems strange why this image is called "the Jina of Kalinga." It does not refer

<sup>1</sup> खव - देशायतन - संकारकारको —J B O R S, iv, p. 403

<sup>2</sup> सेहि विज्ञासयतो उतरायथराजानो जगधानं च विपुलं भवं जनेतो संगमागध - वसु च नेयाति
--Ibid, iv, p. 401, and xii, p. 282

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

to any Tirthankara whose life-history was connected with Kalinga, but it seems, according to the interpretation of Muni Jinaviṇaya, that it is a practice still prevalent to designate the image of a particular Tirthankara after the name of the locality of the establishment<sup>1</sup> The first Tirthankara (Rshabhadeva) at Śatruṅjaya for instance is called Śatruṅjaya Jina Similarly the image at Abu is called "the Arbuda Jina," and the one at Dhulew (Mewar) is called "the Dhulew Jina"<sup>2</sup> Thus it is not necessary that the image must be of a Jina associated with Kalinga in his life-history The expression "the Jina of Kalinga" merely means that the Jaina image was worshipped at Kalinga or at the Kalingan capital

Before we pass on to the next line we shall deal firstly with the questions as to who this Bahasati-mitra was, and with whom he can be identified, and secondly, the antiquity of Jainism in Kalinga

Looking to the contemporary history of the time it is certain that this Bahasati-mitra was the great Sunga king Pushyamitra He, a Brahman like the Śātavāhanas of the west, having brought about the orthodox revolution which pulled the Mauryas from the throne, founded his dynasty What we mean by orthodox revolution is that Pushyamitra was the outcome of the revival of the old Brahmanism, in the beginning of the second century B C The evidence of Tāranātha (A D 1608, resting on old works), as correctly translated by Schiefner, agrees with that of the Divyāvadāna<sup>3</sup> in stating that Pushyamitra was the ally of unbelievers, and himself burned monasteries and slew monks

"There took place a war of the Brahman king Pushyamitra with the rest of the Tirthyas He burnt a number of monasteries from Madhyadeśa up to Jalandar"<sup>4</sup>

Again, coming to the orthodox revolution, the fact is that there may be some strong political reasons at its back, but nevertheless it must be said that Aśoka, the great Maurya emperor, little thought how his lack of political instinct, his religious policy, his theocracy, and his partition undermined the strength of the empire Otherwise it is not possible that the military despotism so well established could disappear only forty or fifty years after the death of the greatest Indian monarch, whose memory is cherished with affection all over the Buddhist world, and who is regarded as a great and

<sup>1</sup> Cf J B O R S, IV, p 386

<sup>2</sup> Ibid

<sup>3</sup> Cf Cowell and Neil, op cit p 434

<sup>4</sup> Schiefner, Tāranātha's History of Buddhism, p 81

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

good ruler all over the world His death was welcome news to the Brahmans of North India, to the powerful Āndhras of the south, and to the enemies of India outside The Mauryan control up to the Hindukush became weak soon after Aśoka's death The north-western frontiers, ever exposed to foreign attacks, now became a tempting field to the Greek provinces of Bactria, Parthia and the warlike races of the borders

Notwithstanding his toleration the Brahmans, who feared that their religion was in danger, were embittered against Aśoka. Besides this they should also have lost many of their former privileges This led to a great reaction against Mauryan ascendancy, which was promoted for some time in secret by the Brahmans and culminated in open revolution in the time of the later Mauryas The descendants of Aśoka retained only Magadha and the neighbouring home provinces Brhadratha, the last king of the imperial Mauryan line, was finally treacherously murdered by his commander-in-chief, Pushyamitra—"the Indian Macbeth"<sup>1</sup> Now, considering this from the chronological point of view, we find that the whole duration of the Maurya dynasty, according to Purāṇic authority, was one hundred and thirty-seven years, and if this period be accepted, and reckoned from the accession of Candragupta in 322 B.C., the dynasty must have come to an end about 185 B.C.<sup>2</sup> This date, as we have seen before, is certainly approximately correct Thus the Brahman dynasty which uprooted the Buddhist Mauryas succeeded to the throne of India about 185 B.C.

Thus at the instigation of the Brahmans Puspa or Pushyamitra faithlessly slew his master, imprisoned the ministers, usurped the throne, proclaimed himself king, founded the Sunga or Mitra dynasty, which lasted for about a decade and a century, and brought about an orthodox revolution in literature and Hindu society<sup>3</sup> Bāna-bhatta, in his life of Harshavardhana (seventh century A.D.), alludes thus to this military coup d'état "And reviewing the whole army, under the pretext of showing him his forces, the base-born general, Pushyamitra, crushed his master Vrhadratha, the Maurya, who was weak in keeping his coronation oath"<sup>4</sup>

Writing on this very point the learned author of The Hindu

<sup>1</sup> Mazumdar, op cit, p. 626

<sup>2</sup> See Pargiter, op cit, p. 27

<sup>3</sup> J B O R S, x, p. 202

<sup>4</sup> The rendering combines the versions of Cowell and Thomas (Harsacarita, p. 193), of Bühler (I A, ii, p. 863) and of Jayaswal Cf. Smith, op cit, p. 268, n. 1

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DESA

History opines that "Pushyamitra, when old, claimed the honour of lord paramount of North India. An imperial sacrifice and a horse sacrifice were magnificently performed by Pushyamitra under the guidance and presidentship of his Guru Patañjali, the noted commentator of Pāṇini's Grammar. Pushyamitra tried his best to revive the Brahmanic faith. His sacrifice was rather a Brahmanic victory over the Buddhists. Buddhist writers have branded Pushyamitra as a persecutor. It is alleged that he burned monasteries and slew monks from Magadha to Jālandhar in the Punjab. There may be some truth in it. The motive of Pushyamitra was that there was widespread Buddhist and Jain conspiracy against him." <sup>1</sup>

Taking into consideration all these points one thing is clear—that the reaction of the inquisitorial tyranny of Aśoka's system gave a death-blow first to the Buddhist faith, and secondly, for other political reasons, to the Mauryan predominance in North India. The extreme favour which Aśoka showed to the Buddhists, and to some extent also to the Jainas, resulted in a serious fall in the privileged position of the Brahmins. They were also dissatisfied by the prohibition of bloody sacrifices and the irritating proceedings of the censors. Thus the moment the strong hand of the old emperor dropped the sceptre Brahman influence reasserted itself and produced a revolt which, as we have seen, resulted in the foundation of the new dynasty known as that of the Sungas. <sup>2</sup> Coming to the territorial extent of the Sungas we find that Pāṭaliputra, the modern Patna, the ancient Pāṭibhoṭra and then the capital of North India, continued to be the capital of the Sungas, who perhaps owned authority over all the central or home provinces. The kingdom extended south of Narmada. Besides it embraced Behar, Tirhoot, and the modern united provinces of Agra and Oudh. The Punjab, it seems, was probably long lost to the later Mauryas and the Sungas.

Again, this identification of Brhaspati with Pushyamitra on the basis of temporary history is further supported by the connection between Brhaspati and Pushya asterisms. Writing on this Mr Smith says "Bahapati is identical with Bahasati Mitra of certain coins and short inscriptions, both names being Prākṛt variations of the Sanskrit Brahhaspati, who was believed to be the regent of the zodiacal asterism (Nakshatra) named Pushya or

<sup>1</sup> Mazumdar, op cit, p. 686

<sup>2</sup> Cf. J P A S B, 1910, pp. 259-262

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Tishya which forms part of the constellation Cancer or the Crab. Bahapatī certainly is an alternative name for Pushyamitra, the first Sunga king according to the list in the Purānas”<sup>1</sup>

Emphasising the similar standpoint Mr Haraprasad Sastri says to the following effect

“Aśoka was, to all intents and purposes, a Buddhist monarch, and a bigoted one too. He put a stop to all animal sacrifices throughout his vast empire. This is an order which was certainly directed against the Brahmins, a privileged class wherever they settled. This was followed by another edict in which Aśoka boasted that those who were regarded as gods on earth have been reduced by him in a short time into false gods. If it means anything it means that the Brahmanas, who were regarded as Bhūdevas or gods on earth, had been shown up by him. The appointments created by Aśoka of Dharma Mahāmātas—that is, of superintendents of morals—was a direct invasion of the right and privileges of the Brahmanas. They were not the persons to brook the injury done to them quietly. And to crown all, Aśoka, in one of his edicts, insisted upon all his officers strictly observing the principle of Danda-samatā and Vyavahāra-samatā—that is, the equality of punishment and the equality in lawsuits, irrespective of caste, colour and creed. Under such circumstances the prospects of being huddled together in prison with the unspeakable non-Āryans, whipped, impaled alive and hanged, were very offensive to the highly educated, respectable and privileged community. They tolerated these indignities heaped on them as long as the strong hand of Aśoka was guiding the empire. They began to cast their eyes for a military man to fight for them, and they found such a man in Pushya-mitra, the commander-in-chief of the Maurya Empire. He was a Brahmanist to the core and hated the Buddhists”<sup>2</sup>

In short, there is no difficulty about the identification of Bahapatimitra with Pushyamitra Sunga, and moreover no historical fallacy is committed by such an identification<sup>3</sup>. Everything fully agrees with the contemporary historical personages and well suits the events of the time

<sup>1</sup> J R A S, 1918, p. 545

<sup>2</sup> Sastri (Haraprasad), J P A S B, 1910, pp. 250-260

<sup>3</sup> It may be noted here that such alternative names are common in Indian history—c Bimbisāra—Śrenika—Ajātasatru—Kūmya, Aśoka—Priyadasi, Candragupta—Narendra, Balamitra—Agnimitra, Bhānumitra—Vasumitra, etc

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

That Pushyamitra was a Brahman and Khāravela a Jaina is a point which adds to the importance of the latter's reign from the viewpoint of Jaina history. If Khāravela had not been there to safeguard the Jaina faith against the Brahmanical crusades of Pushyamitra the revolution of Mahāvira would have suffered the same fate as that of Buddha at the hands of one who was known to fame as the "annihilator of Buddha's doctrines" <sup>1</sup>

According to what we have said before, Khāravela attacked Magadha twice during his rule. In his first attack he advanced within a few miles of Pātaliputra. Pushyamitra made a strategic withdrawal to Mathura, and Khāravela apparently considered it wise at the moment not to proceed farther than the Barābar Hill (Gorathagiri).

In his second attack Khāravela was more successful. Entering Northern India and marching at the foot of the Himalayas he suddenly appeared before the capital of Magadha, on the north side of the Ganges, which he crossed with the help of the famous elephants of Kalinga <sup>2</sup>. Pushyamitra was forced to submit, and the treasures of his capital were seized by the victor. Among them was an image of the Jina of Kalinga which at one time had been carried away by King Nanda of Magadha. His temporary success affected only the eastern frontier of the Sunga kingdom. He may have conquered Bengal and Eastern Behar, where numerous instances of Jaina influence still survive <sup>3</sup>.

Mr Jayaswal, in connection with this victory of Khāravela, says "Pushyamitra seems to have avoided staking his throne on the issue of a battle by returning those objects which epitomised the Magadha-Kalinga history of the past three centuries. Most likely it was the power of the Magadha sovereign which rendered the object of the campaign little more than a diplomatic victory, for otherwise it was too tempting for any human being to let go the imperial throne of India without ascending it" <sup>4</sup>.

That Khāravela could not actually usurp the throne of Pushyamitra is clear from the text of the inscription. It is no use stretching the imagination so far as that. What really took place is that, as with Sātakarni, here also Khāravela seems to have been forced to remain satisfied with what little moral supremacy he could establish over his neighbours, because after the murder of Brhadratha,

<sup>1</sup> Divyāvadāna, pp 483-484

<sup>2</sup> Mazumdar, op cit, p. 638

<sup>3</sup> Smith, op cit, p 209

<sup>4</sup> J B O R S, III, p 447

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the last Maurya, the political atmosphere of the time was surging with conflicts between Powers eager to share in the spoils of the Mauryan Empire. It was a struggle for supremacy among those Powers which arose on the ruins of the great empire. In this struggle for supremacy it may safely be said that Khāravela played a prominent part and fully acquitted himself wherever he laid his hands.

Coming to the second point, about the antiquity of Jainism in Kalinga, we find that the only clue we get from this inscription is about the image of the Jina of Kalinga. As we have said before, it is clear from the phraseology used here that this must be an image worshipped at Kalinga, or at the Kalingan capital. Now, as the inscription tells us, this image was carried away by King Nanda, which might have been from Kalinga to Magadha. We have seen that this King Nanda is Nanda I of the Jainas and not Nandivardhana, as Smith has taken it, in accordance with Jayaswal and others.<sup>1</sup> If all these factors are taken as historically sound, there is no exaggeration in stating that, long before Buddhism managed to secure a foothold in Kalinga, Jainism had its sway, and was popular with the people of the place.

In short, at the time of the conquest of Kalinga by Nanda I, Jainism appears to have been the prevailing religion. Substantiating this statement Mr Jayaswal says "Jainism had already entered Orissa as early as the time of King Nanda, who, as I have shown, was Nanda Vardhana of the Śaśunāga dynasty. Before the time of Khāravela there were temples of the Arhats on the Udayagiri Hills, as they are mentioned in the inscription as institutions which had been in existence before Khāravela's time. It seems that Jainism had been the national religion of Orissa for some centuries."<sup>2</sup>

This is also corroborated by a Jaina tradition which regards Orissa as a Kshatriya centre as early as the sixth century B.C. It tells us that in Orissa a Kshatriya friend of the father of Mahāvīra was ruling and that Mahāvīra went there.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "The Nanda Rāja referred to appears to be Nandivardhana, the ninth Śaśunāga king of the Purāṇas. It seems to be necessary to treat him and his successor Mahanandin, No. 10, as Nandas, distinct from the nine Nandas who come between No. 10 and Candragupta. In the third edition of my Early History of India (1914) I placed the accession of Nandivardhana about 418 B.C. He must now go back to c. 470 B.C. or possibly to an earlier date."—Smith, J.R.A.S., 1918, p. 547.

<sup>2</sup> J.B.O.R.S., III, p. 418.

<sup>3</sup> ततो भगवं मोक्षलिं गच्छो, तस्य सुवागहो नाम रट्टिषो विद्यमानो भगवच्छो सो मोक्षइ, ततो सामी तोक्षलिं गच्छो — Āvadyaka-Sūtra, pp. 219-220.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

of those who had preferred to cling at any risk to the hallowed scenes at home. Our text thus serves as a good confirmation of the tradition about the controversy or the loss of certain Jaina texts in the time of Candragupta, and Kalinga, being more or less under the influence of Bhadrabāhu and his colleagues in the south, evidently did not accept the restoration of the council which met in Magadha.<sup>1</sup>

The last line of the inscription—namely, the seventeenth—is also to be read with a portion of the previous line, and it characterises in short the chief attributes of Khāravela, and puts down in a few words the extent of his power. There may be certain exaggerations, especially in this part of the inscription, and it is natural, but since there is nothing else before us to make a comparative study of Khāravela we shall remain satisfied with a literal translation of the line, which runs as follows

“He is the King of Prosperity (Kshema), the King of Extension (of the Empire) (or, a ‘King to the old people’), a King to the Bhikshus (or, though king yet a Bhikshu), the King of Dharma who has been seeing to, listening to and experiencing welfare (Kalyānas)

“King Khāravela-Śrī, the great conqueror, descended from a family of the dynasty of royal sages, one whose empire has been extended, with an empire which is kept protected by the leader of the empire (or army), one whose chariots and army have not been obstructed, one who is the restorer of every temple, one who respects every sect, one who is an expert by virtue of special qualities”<sup>2</sup>

Here ends the autobiography of Bhikshurāja Khāravela, the great Emperor of Kalinga and one of the greatest royal patrons of the Jaina faith. The invocation of the Arhats and Siddhas in the first line, the building of temples and caves for the Jaina Śramanas, the gifts of lands and other accessories to the Yāpa professors, and last but not least the restoration of the image of the Jina of Kalinga carried away by King Nanda prove beyond doubt that Khāravela was a Jaina. He came to the throne about 183 B C, at the age of twenty-four. At the time of his first invasion of Magadha he was only thirty-two, and at the time of the second he was

<sup>1</sup> This council fixed the canon of the Jaina sacred literature, consisting of eleven Angas and fourteen Pūrvas

<sup>2</sup> खेमराजा ऋ वटराजा अशुभवन्तो कलाणानि लव - पासंड - पूषको शारवेलसिरि,
—J B O R S, I, p 403, and xiii, p 236

JAINISM IN KALINGA-DEŚA

thirty-six According to Mr Jayaswal he was probably dead before 152 B C <sup>1</sup>

He is that imperial king about whose dynasty we know hardly anything, and about whose career there is absolutely no historical source but this long inscription, which also, as usual, could not escape the ravages of time With all this it may be justly stated that it will not be surprising if on some happy day a scholar were to come across a better and more comprehensive document about this Dharmarāja, "the illustrious descendant of the dynasty of royal sages" It is really strange, nay unbelievable, that the Jainas have got nothing to say about one whose contribution to Jaina history is second to none

About the extent of Khāravela's rule and of the fresh conquests then made by him after his succession we have not a single contemporary record, historical or otherwise, on which we can lay our hands It is just like a voice from the other world telling us that in days gone by there was some great Kalinga Emperor Khāravela, and that you must take him as such and place him as one of the contemporary historical luminaries on the sole basis of these seventeen lines commemorating his memory on the Hāthigumphā inscription

The inscription tells us that our hero subdued the great Sunga king, Pushyamitra, in the north, that the great Indo-Greek king, Demetrios, retreated and left Mathura just on hearing of his victories against the Sungas, that he subdued the great Śātakarni and his feudatories in the south, and that with all these military triumphs his fame spread so far that even the Pāndya king in the remote south sent him complimentary gifts

With no other document at our disposal the questions as to how much to believe and with what limitations to interpret the facts laid down by the inscription present a great difficulty This becomes extremely intricate when such military expeditions, as is abundantly proved by inscriptions, form part of the ordinary routine in a state of society in which war had become a profession and the soldier was an hereditary member of a professional caste, and in which desire to extend one's rule was, according to the law books, one of the chief qualifications of kingship <sup>2</sup> This characteristic feature of the life of ancient and mediæval India is well marked

<sup>1</sup> J B O R S xiii, p 243

<sup>2</sup> Manu, ix, 251, x, 119, etc

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

in the eulogies of kings, which fill so large a proportion of the inscriptions that have come down to our time, and with whatsoever broadmindedness we may look at them we have to confess that these works are only the output of grateful beneficiaries or court poets, whose object was rather to glorify their royal patron than to hand down to posterity an accurate account of his reign. It is clear that successes are evidently exaggerated, while reverses are passed over in complete silence. The statements of the inscriptions are very frequently those of prejudiced witnesses, and they must be weighed as such if we are to estimate rightly the value of these few scattered fragments of historical evidence which time has preserved. The achievements of Khāravela loom large in the Hāthigumphā inscription, and in the words of Sir Ashutosh Mookerji: "Stone has again yielded a complete record, full of faithful details, of the Emperor Khāravela of Orissa, whose name had disappeared from the annals of our country and passed into complete oblivion, though there was hardly a great town in India in the 2nd century before the Christian era which did not tremble at the sight, if not at the very name, of his mighty legions."<sup>1</sup>

Anyhow there is no doubt that Khāravela was a prominent figure in his day, and that morally he had reached a height where he was secure, and where he was standing on no slippery ground. In short, he was a great man in his time, who gave ample proofs of his greatness when he was called upon by Providence to guide the destinies of a great people at a critical and unsettled period in Indian history.

<sup>1</sup> J BORS, x, p 8

CHAPTER V

Mathura Inscriptions

THE Jaina inscriptions in Mathura form the beginning of the next landmark in the history of Jainism in North India, the Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela terminating the former period. The recorded period between the two—i.e. c 150 B C to c 16 B C—need not be taken as blank, because after the great Jaina king of Kalinga we have Vikramāditya of Ujjain, a greater ruler perhaps than the Kalingādhpati, who is claimed by the Jainas as a royal patron of their own church. We shall, after a brief survey of the epigraphic evidence found there, see that, simultaneously with Kalinga and Malwa, Mathura had become the home of the Jaina community in the north.

We have referred to this Vikrama and his era—which begins in or about 57 or 56 B C—in connection with the Nirvāna date of Mahāvīra. The Jainistic recension of the Vikramacarita tells us that “Vikrama in his pious exaltation, after listening to the instruction of the Jaina teacher Siddhasena Divākara, freed the whole earth from debt, and (in so doing) effected a change (literally, a turning-point) in the era of Vardhamāna”<sup>1</sup>. It is he who handed down to later India its first persistent era, which is still the common era of North India. To quote Edgerton “Such has been the belief of the Hindus, not only Jainas but others, for many centuries”<sup>2</sup>. This great Avantī lord, whose glorious days and superhuman virtues are so extensively praised in both Jainistic and Brahmanistic literature, used to call himself Vikramāditya, etymologically meaning “like the sun in his prowess”. This title seems to have appealed powerfully to the fancy of many a king who succeeded, since many indeed are the kings who have assumed it of their own accord, with no connection of lineage whatever. This shows that the first Vikramāditya must have been a very great king, because otherwise the title would not have been so very enviable.

It is this Vikramāditya who is considered to be a Jaina by the traditional literature of the Jainas Referring to his predecessor, Gardabhilla, they tell us that their great Jaina saint, Kālikācārya, being insulted by him by the abduction of his sister, who had joined the order with him, approached one of the Scythian kings and with his help successfully wreaked his vengeance<sup>1</sup> To quote Dr Charpentier "This legend is perhaps not totally devoid of all historical interest For it records how the Jaina Kālaka, having been insulted by King Gardabhilla of Ujjain, who, according to various traditions, was the father of the famous Vikramāditya, went in his desire for revenge to the land of the Sakas, whose king was styled 'King of Kings' (Sāhānusāhi)<sup>2</sup> This title, in its Greek and Indian forms, was certainly borne by the Śaka kings of the Punjab, Maues and his successors, who belong to this period, and as it actually appears in the form Shaonano Shao on the coins of their successors, the Kushāna monarchs, we are perhaps justified in concluding that the legend is to some extent historical in character However this may be, the story goes on to tell us that Kālaka persuaded a number of Śaka Satraps to invade Ujjain and overthrow the dynasty of Gardabhilla, but that some years afterwards his son, the glorious Vikramāditya, repelled the invaders and re-established the throne of his ancestors<sup>3</sup> What the historical foundation of this legend may be is wholly uncertain, perhaps it contains faint recollections of the Scythian dominion in Western India during the first century B.C In any case, it seems undoubtedly to give further proof of the connection of the Jains with Ujjain—a fact indicated also by their use of the Vikrama era, which was established in the country of Mālwā, of which Ujjain was the capital"<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Edgerton, Vikrama's Adventures, pt i, Int, p lviii. Cf. Tawney, Prabandhacintāmaṇi, pp 11 ff., Śatruñjaya Māhātmya, Sarga XIV, v 103, p 808.

<sup>2</sup> Edgerton, op cit, Int, p lxx.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

In connection with Saint Kālaka of the Jainas it may be mentioned here that he went to King Sātayāna of Pratiśthānapura in the Deccan During the Paryushana—the sacred festival at the close of the Jaina year—the king, being engaged in the observance

<sup>1</sup> Kālikācārya kathā, vv 9-40, pp 1-4 Cf Konow, E I, xiv, p 298 "Kālakasūri, the uprooter of Gardabhilla, lived 458 v"—Klatt, I A, xi, p 251 Cf ibid, p 247, Charpentier, C H I, i, p 168, Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 75, M A R, 1928, p 11

<sup>2</sup> परीक्षित. मुरिचरं स साहि —Kālikācārya-kathā, v 26, p 2, साहानसाहि: सच भव्यतेइव —Ibid, v 27, p 8 Cf "the Jaina work, Kālikācārya-kathānaka, states that their kings were called Sāhi"—Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 274, Jacobi, Z D M G, xxxiv, p 262 Cf Konow, op cit, p 298

<sup>3</sup> "He (Vikramāditya) saved the nation and Hinduism by signally defeating the Scythians, whose political importance and outlandish manners had appalled the Indians"—Mazumdar, op cit, p 68 Cf ibid, p 688 "Vikramāditya ousted the Sakas and became king, whereafter he established his own era"—Konow, op and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> Charpentier, op and loc cit

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

of the festival of Indra, found it difficult to come on the fifth of Bhādrapada, and accordingly the great Guru is said to have changed his appointment to a day earlier—viz the fourth of Bhādrapada. Since then the whole Jaina community have begun the fast on the fourth, though very late in history with the rise of certain Gacchas the fourth was replaced by the fifth of the same month<sup>1</sup>. This event, if it is true, is significant from two points of view—the first, that it refers to the Svetāmbara contact with the south, and secondly, because it alludes to a Jaina prince in the Deccan who was important enough to be so much respected by a great saint like Kālakācārya, and who had a share in fixing the date of an important festival of the Jainas like Pajjūsana<sup>2</sup>.

Coming to Vikramāditya, the successor of Gardabhilla, Jaina sources tell us that Siddhasena Divākara, one of the most prominent stars of the history of Jaina literature, lived about this time at the king's court, and they also credit him with the conversion of the great Vikrama,<sup>3</sup> and according to Mrs Stevenson of Devapāla, "king of Kumārapura" as well<sup>4</sup>. Two other events are likewise supposed to have happened about this time—the defeat of the Buddhists in a great argument by a famous Jaina controversialist, an ascetic called Ārya Khaputa, who lived in Broach<sup>5</sup>, and the foundation of Pālitānā, where Satruñjaya, the holiest of the Jaina Tirthas, is situated<sup>6</sup>.

The Kharataragaccha Pattāvah tells us that Vajrasvāmī, (496-584 v), the sixteenth on the list, extended the Jaina religion southward in the kingdom of the Bauddhas<sup>7</sup>. The second event, <sup>1</sup> ततश्चतुर्थीं क्रियतां नृपेण, विज्ञप्तेषु गुरुणाऽनुमेने—Kālakācārya-kathā, v 54, p 5 Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 76. This, as Klatt tells us, is supported by the Pajjāvah of the Tapagaccha (IA, xi, p 251), on the other hand, the Kharataragaccha Pajjāvah informs us that the Kālaka, who transferred the Paryushanaparvan, lived in 998 v, and that there were two more of the same name prior to him, one of whom lived in 458 v and was connected with Gardabhilla—IA, xi, p 247.

<sup>2</sup> That the King Sātayāna was a devout Jaina is clear from the Kālakācārya-kathā (vv 50-54, pp 4-5), but it is not known who he was. Pratishthānapura is known to us as the western capital of the Sātavāhanas. Jaina tradition claims Hala of this dynasty as belonging to its own religion. Cf Glaserapp, Der Jainismus, p 58, Jhaveri, Niruddha-Kaika, Int, p xi.

<sup>3</sup> "He (Siddhasena Divākara) converted Vikramāditya 470 years after Mahāvīra's Niruddha"—Klatt, op cit, p 247. Cf ibid, p 251, Edgerton, op cit, pp 251 ff, Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 77, Tawney, op cit, pp 116 ff, MAR, 1928, p 10.

<sup>4</sup> Cf Stevenson (Mrs), op and loc cit.

<sup>5</sup> विशाखिना चार्यस्युदा जायायीः, भृगुवज्रो बुद्धो निर्गतः, पादयोः पतिः.
—Āvātyaka-Sūtra, pp 411-412. Cf Jhaveri, op and loc cit.

<sup>6</sup> Cf ibid, Int, p xix, Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, pp 77-78.

<sup>7</sup> Cf Klatt, op cit, p 247, Hemacandra, Parishajaparvan, Canto XII, vv 811, 888, Āvātyaka-Sūtra, p 295.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

about the founding of Pālitānā, seems to refer to Pādaliptācārya, who is reported to have been a contemporary of the great Vikrama.<sup>1</sup> According to the Jainas he was gifted with a power of flying through the air.<sup>2</sup> In a note to this Mrs Stevenson observes "Śatruñjaya, the Jainas say, was built by a monk who had the power of rising through the air, and by a disciple of his who had the power of creating gold. This fortunate conjunction of talents has resulted in one of the loveliest temple cities in the world"<sup>3</sup> In connection with this Tirtha the Kharatara Paṭṭavālī tells us that it was demolished in 570 v, and restored by Jāvada, whose father, Bhāvada, was a contemporary of Vikrama.<sup>4</sup> According to the Jaina tradition both the king and Jāvada are said to have gone on pilgrimage to Pālitānā, and both of them spent a lot for the upkeep of the Tirtha during their stay there.<sup>5</sup>

In connection with Pādalipta also it may be mentioned here that he too, like Kālaka, is connected with the Śvetāmbara contact with the south. It appears from the Samyaktva-Saptati of Haribhadrāsūri that the great Ācārya went to Mānyakheta,<sup>6</sup> and that in all these places there existed Jaina Samghas "noted for their good qualities"<sup>7</sup> Thus from the traditions connected with Kālaka and Pādalipta it seems certain that about the first century B.C. Śvetāmbara Jainas must have predominated in the Deccan. King Śālivāhana of Pratiśthānapura, in the Samyaktva-Saptati, describes Pādalipta as having put an end "to all bad religious systems." From this it becomes clear that Śālivāhana too must have been of the same religion as Pādalipta—i.e. Śvetāmbara.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Klatt, op cit, pp 247, 251 "Palitta-Sūri (Pādalipta) is definitely connected with the foundation of the Pālitānā City"—Jhaveri, op and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> "Pādalipta had acquired the flying-lore by applying medical ingredients to feet, and daily performed pilgrimage of the five sacred places including Śatruñjaya (Pālitānā) and Gīrnār or Revantagiri"—Ibid, Int, p xi Cf Tawney, op cit, p 195

<sup>3</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 78, n 1 "Nāgārjuna, the pupil of Pādaliptasūri was trying to acquire 'Suvarṇa Siddhi' (power to make gold)" etc—Jhaveri, op cit, Int, p xii

<sup>4</sup> "Jāvada, a merchant of Saurāśṭra (Kathiawar), sent a fleet to China and the Eastern Archipelago, which returned after twelve years with a burthen of gold. The father of Jāvada lived in the time of Vikrama"—Mazumdar, op cit, p 65 Cf Śatruñjaya Māhātmya, Sarga XIV, vv 104, 192 ff, pp 808, 816 ff, Jhaveri, op cit, Int, p xix

<sup>5</sup> Cf Śatruñjaya Māhātmya, Sarga XIV, v 280, p 824

<sup>6</sup> Mānyakheta or Mānyakheta is to be identified with Mālkhed, in the Nizam's territory—Dey, Geographical Dictionary, p 126 This Mālkhed or Mānyakheta, which Pādalipta visited, became famous in the succeeding centuries as the capital of the Rāshtrakūṭas, who counted among them not a few patrons and followers of the Jaina religion.

<sup>7</sup> Samyaktva-Saptati, vv 96, 97 See M.A.R., 1928, pp 10-11 "For the greater part of his life Pādalipta resided at Manakhetapura"—Jhaveri, op cit, Int, p x

<sup>8</sup> Samyaktva-Saptati, v 158 Cf M.A.R., 1928, p 11, Jhaveri, op cit, Int, p xi

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

Taking stock of all these facts connected with Vikrama and his period it must be said that they are based mostly on the long list of teachers, "often more or less apocryphal, which have been preserved by the modern subdivisions of the Jaina community,"<sup>1</sup> and on the literature of the period in no way connected with the one under our consideration. What is to be discovered is whether these circumstances can warrant the conclusion that Jaina traditions are without any foundation, and that Vikrama, the most noted of the quasi-historical heroes of mediæval India, is a purely legendary monarch.

A thorough examination, as far as possible, of the various theories propounded in regard to this by different scholars has been made by Edgerton in his Introduction to his Vikrama's Adventures.<sup>2</sup> Without repeating the arguments put forth by the learned scholar in their refutations suffice it to say that, leaving aside Vikramāditya, nothing can be stated with absolute certainty about many other personages in ancient India whose historicity is unquestioned either on epigraphic or numismatic evidence. There is no reason why the reality of this "Hindu King Arthur"—a model for real kings to follow—should be doubted when it is based on "both Jainistic and Brahmanistic literature." To quote Edgerton "It seems that the Pattāvalis, or lists of Jaina pontiffs, have the look of being in the main as reliable, certainly, as any other native literary source of Indian history (which, to be sure, may not be saying very much).

I am not aware that there is any definite and positive reason for rejecting the Jainistic chronicles completely, and for saying categorically that there was no such king as Vikrama living in 57 B.C. Do we know enough about the history of that century to be able to deny that a local king of Malava, bearing one of the names by which Vikrama goes, may have won for himself a somewhat extensive dominion in Central India (for we do not of course need to swallow whole the characteristic Hindu exaggerations which could make him a universal Emperor)?"<sup>3</sup>

Besides Edgerton there are other scholars, like Buhler and Tawney, who also defend the historicity of the Jainistic chronicles. "In particular," observes Dr Buhler, "must it be admitted that the persons introduced in the older, as well in the more recent, narratives are really historical characters. Although it is frequently

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier, op cit, p. 167.

<sup>2</sup> Edgerton, op cit, Int., pp lviii ff

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p lxxv

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the case that an individual is introduced at a period earlier or later than that to which he really belonged or that the most absurd stories are told with regard to him, yet there is no case forthcoming in which we could affirm with certainty that a man named by these chroniclers is a pure figment of the imagination. On the contrary, every freshly discovered inscription, every collection of old manuscripts, and every really historic work that is brought to light, furnishes confirmation of the actual existence of one or other of the characters described by them. In the same way all exact dates given by them deserve the most careful attention. When they are found to agree in two works of this class that are independent of one another they may, without hesitation, be accepted as historically correct " <sup>1</sup>

Dr Sten Konow goes a little further, and clearly indicates that scholars are becoming less disdainful of the Indian traditions about Vikrama. He rightly welcomes the story of the great saint Kālakācārya-kathānaka, and how he was insulted and so on. To quote the eminent scholar "I know that most European scholars, though many of them speak with respect about Indian tradition, do not usually take any notice of it, but I am unable to see why. And with regard to the narrative Kālakācārya-kathānaka I see no reason whatever why we should disbelieve it. I have shown elsewhere that there are good reasons for assuming the existence of the Malava King Vikramāditya at an early date," etc <sup>2</sup>

Thus on the authority of scholars like Charpentier, Edgerton, Buhler, Tawney and Sten Konow we come to this conclusion—that the traditional literature of the Jainas can rightly claim to be considered historical, and that the reality of Vikrama and his era need not be denied. Such seems to have been the latest opinion of Vincent Smith also, for he observes "It is possible that such a Rājā may have existed" <sup>3</sup>. Moreover, as seen before, the kingdom of Avantī or Malava was a centre of Jainism even in the days of Mahāvira. During the times of the Mauryas it came more and more to the forefront, and finally at the end of their rule the Jainas, gradually losing their position in the kingdom of Magadha, had begun their migration towards the western part of India, where they settled, and where they have retained their settlement even

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, Ueber das Leben des Jaina Mönches Hemacandra, p. 6 Cf. Tawney, op. cit., Int., pp. vi-vii, ibid., pp. v ff.

<sup>2</sup> Konow, op. cit., p. 294

<sup>3</sup> Smith, Oxford History of India, p. 151

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

to the present day<sup>1</sup> No doubt Kalinga has its own contribution to make to the history of North Indian Jainism, but the general tendency was towards the west Another locality in which the Jainas appear to have been firmly established, from the middle of the second century B C onwards, was Mathura Since the days of Candragupta, and after him Samprati and Khāravela, the Jaina spread seems to have been uncommonly vigorous Leaving aside the sentiments and the religious outlook of these great kings, an uncommonly vigorous spread of the Jainas is evident from the great number of Kulas and Sākhās which we find in the Jaina Samgha from the Mathura inscriptions dating more or less from the second century B C

The Mathura inscriptions bring us to the Indo-Scythian rule in Northern India We have seen that Candragupta placed himself at the head of the Indians, who chafed under the Macedonian yoke, and after Alexander's departure defeated his generals and "shook the yoke of servitude from the neck" of India What happened in India immediately after the departure of Alexander is not clear "The mists of obscurity cling heavily round the course that events took in India during the years that immediately followed the death of Alexander the Great"<sup>2</sup> However, this much is certain that for about a century after his death the strong arms of the Mauryan emperors held India for the Indians against all comers, and treated their Hellenistic neighbours on equal terms<sup>3</sup>

After the Mauryas we have seen how the Magadhan monarchy under the Brahmanical Sungas and the Greek power in the north-west were falling before the onslaughts of the Cedis under Khāravela We have already referred to the feuds of Demetrios and Eucratides, which greatly weakened the power of the Greeks As regards other Indian enemies of the Bactrian Greeks and onslaughts of the Sātavāhanas on the Sungas we do not propose to say anything For the purposes of a connected history we need say only this much "that in the second and first centuries B C. Greek rule in parts of Kafiristan and Gandhāra was supplanted by that of the Sakas"<sup>4</sup> To quote Rapson "The political isolation of India was completed by the Scythian conquest of Bactria c 135 B C, and

<sup>1</sup> Cf Charpentier, op and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Macdonald, CH I, 1, p 427

<sup>3</sup> Cf Smith, Early History of India, p 258

<sup>4</sup> Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 278

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

by the long struggle between Rome and Parthia which began in 53 B C ”<sup>1</sup> It was also with one of these Śaka rulers, known to us by the name Muranda, that the great Pādalipta was closely connected. Muranda is known to us from the traditional literature of the Jainas as the ruler of Pātaliputra, and Pādalipta seems to have gained complete influence at his court.<sup>2</sup> The great Ācārya is said to have cured the king of the terrible headache he was suffering from. This incident is related by the Prabhāvaka-Carita in the following words:

“So quickly as Pādalipta turns his first finger round the knee-joint does the headache of King Muranda come to an end ”<sup>3</sup>

However the Scythian (Śaka) invaders of Bactria were succeeded by the Yuch-chi, and when, in the first century A D, the predominant tribe of the Yuch-chi, the Kushānas, extended their dominion in Turkestan and Bactria to North-West India, the Kushāna Empire formed a connecting link between China and India, and provided the means of an intercourse which was fruitful in results. As the explorations of recent years have shown, an Indian culture, Indian languages and the Indian alphabets were established in Chinese Turkestan. Particularly, to repeat it once more, according to Mr N C Mehta even Jaina subjects came to be painted in the cave-temples of Chinese Turkestan.

With this shadowy background of Indian history in general we shall now refer to the Mathura inscriptions, and examine their importance in connection with the Jaina church. The historical importance of these inscriptions cannot be better summed up than in the following words of Cunningham: “The information derived from these inscriptions is of the greatest value for the ancient history of India. The general purport of all of them is the same—to record the gifts of certain individuals, for the honour of their religion and for the benefit of themselves and their parents. When the inscriptions are confined to this simple announcement they are of little importance, but as the donors in most of these Mathura records have added the name of the reigning kings, and the Samvat date at the time of the gift, they form in fact so many skeleton

<sup>1</sup> Rapson, CHI, 1, p. 60

<sup>2</sup> घाटलीपुरे रामास्ति मुन्दसो नाम स इतान् करसो नृप. सुरेर्बालस्य यादना प्रणामेऽङ्ग ररेरेव
—Prabhāvaka-Carita, Pādalipta-Prabandha, vv. 44, 61. Cf. Samyuktva-Saptati, v. 48, M A R, 1923, p. 11, Jhaveri op cit, Int., p. 5.

<sup>3</sup> Prabhāvaka-Carita, v. 50. Cf. Samyuktva-Saptati, v. 42, M A R, 1923, op and loc cit.

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

pages of the lost history <sup>1</sup> The direct amount of information which they give belongs to an early and very interesting period—just before and after the Christian era—when, as we learn from the Chinese authorities, the Indo-Scythians had conquered the whole of Northern India, although the actual extent of their conquest was quite unknown Hence the great value of the present inscriptions, from which we learn that the permanent occupation of Mathura had been effected some time before the Samvat year 9, when the Indo-Scythian prince Kanishka filled the throne of North-West India and the Punjab ” <sup>2</sup>

Most of the Jaina inscriptions from Mathura are from the mound known as Kankālī Tila, about half-a-mile due south from the Katrā, which is situated just one mile to the westward of the old fort of Mathura The Kankālī mound seems to have been a very extensive one, the number of statues of all sizes, from the colossal downwards, which it has yielded has scarcely been surpassed by the prolific returns of Buddhist sculpture from the Jail mound <sup>3</sup> There seems to have been two magnificent temples where the mound rises at present Most of the inscriptions are incised on pedestals or bases of naked Jinās either seated or standing, and some of which form a quadruple or a four-faced image called Caturmukha Chronologically the earliest inscription, according to Dr Buhler, is the following one

समनस माहरक्षितस वचिवासिस वक्षीपुत्रस मायकास (सायकास) उत्तरदासक[?]स पासादोमेरने ॥

“An ornamental arch for the temple (the gift) of the lay-hearer Utaradāsaka (Uttaradāsaka), son of the Vachī (Vātsī mother and) disciple of the ascetic Māharkhita (Māgharakshita).” <sup>4</sup>

Because of exceedingly archaic characters and other linguistic peculiarities the learned scholar feels that it may be assigned to the middle of the second century B.C. <sup>5</sup> Next in age come the two inscriptions that are connected with the Satraps of Mathura. Of

<sup>1</sup> The Buddhistical inscriptions at Mathura also are similar to the Jaina inscriptions in their style and contents Cf Dawson, J R A S (New Series), v, p 182

<sup>2</sup> Cunningham, A S I, iii, pp 38-39

<sup>3</sup> Cf ibid, p 46 “The Kankālī Tila has been prolific both in sculptures and inscriptions, all of which are pure Jaina monuments On the upper level stands a large Jaina temple dedicated to Jambū Svāmī an annual fair is held at this place” —Ibid, p 19 This temple is near the Chaurāsi mounds, which is the seat of another Jaina establishment Cf ibid, viii, p 112

<sup>4</sup> Böhler, E I, ii Ins No I, pp. 198-199

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, p 195

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

these the first one is complete, while the other merely mentions some Kshatrapa Mahārāja whose name begins with “Ma”<sup>1</sup> The former is dated in the year 42 of the Lord, the Mahākshatrapa Śodāsa, in the second month of winter, and refers to a votive tablet that was set up by some female Āmohinī<sup>2</sup> It is not clear what era is made use of in this inscription

However, the existence of this Mahākshatrapa Śodāsa was first made known by Cunningham, who found another inscription in that king's name in the Kankālī Tila<sup>3</sup> On the evidence of his coins, which resemble those of Azes, the learned archaeologist placed Śodāsa about 80-57 B C, and conjectured that he was a son of Rājubula or Rañjubula, another Satrap of Mathura<sup>4</sup> This conjecture is also confirmed by the Mathura Lion capital, which mentions Śodāsa as a Chatrava (Satrap) and as the son of Mahāchatrava Rājūla (Rañjubula)<sup>5</sup> To quote Professor Rapson “The Great Satrap Rājūla, whose name appears as Rājuvula in other inscriptions, is unquestionably the Rañjubula who, both as Satrap and as great Satrap, struck coins in imitation of those of Strato I and Strato II, the last of the Yavana kings to reign in the E Punjab, and he was the father of Śodāsa, in whose reign as Satrap the monument was erected Subsequently Śodāsa himself appears as great Satrap in the Āmohinī votive tablet at Mathura, which is dated in the second month of winter of the year 42”<sup>6</sup>

As to the era of the inscription, opinion is divided<sup>7</sup>, but, looking to the way in which the date is recorded, it seems highly probable that an Indian era must have been used<sup>8</sup> If this is granted, as seems likely, it is the era of Vikrama (57 B C), and the inscription is dated in 16-15 B C Dr Konow also adduces good grounds for believing that Śodāsa dated his inscription in the Vikrama era<sup>9</sup> “So far as I can see,” observes the learned scholar,

<sup>1</sup> Cf Buhler, E I, II, Ins No III, p 190

<sup>2</sup> Cf ibid, Ins II, p 199

<sup>3</sup> Cf Cunningham, op cit, p 30, Ins No I

<sup>4</sup> Cf ibid, pp 40-41 ‘Rañjubula, Rājuvula or Rājūla is known from inscriptions as well as coins An inscription of Brāhmī characters at Mora near Mathura calls him Mahākshatrapa But the Greek legend on some of his coins describes him as ‘King of Kings, the Saviour,’ showing that he probably declared his independence” — Raychaudhuri, op cit, p 283

<sup>5</sup> Ibid

<sup>6</sup> Rapson, CH I, I, p 575

<sup>7</sup> Cf Raychaudhuri, op cit pp 283 ff, Smith, op cit, p 241, n 1

<sup>8</sup> Cf Rapson, op cit, pp 575-576

<sup>9</sup> Cf Konow, E I, XIV, pp 139-141

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

"we have a distinct indication that the dating according to three seasons, each comprising four months, was later on considered as a characteristic feature of the Vikrama era. It is well known that in the oldest inscriptions which give name to this era it is designated as a Malava reckoning. In two of the most ancient instances of its use—in the Mandasor inscription of the time of Naravarma and in the Mandasor inscription of the time of Kumāragupta I—the season is expressly mentioned. I think we are forced to the conclusion that Śodāsa dated his inscription in the Vikrama era, and that the method of dating used in that reckoning was adopted by Kanishka and his successors in such records as were destined for India proper, because it was the national North-Indian way of dating."<sup>1</sup>

After these two Satrapa inscriptions follow a few more which have been grouped under the name "Archaic," and which in the opinion of Buhler belong to the period before Kanishka.<sup>2</sup> Of these the following one needs particular mention.

'Adoration to the Arhat Vardhamāna.' A tablet of homage was set up by Śivamitrā (of) the Kauśika (family), (wife) of Gotiputra (Guptiputra), a black serpent for the Pothayas and Śakas."<sup>3</sup>

According to Dr Buhler both Gotiputra and Kośika Śivamitrā were of noble or royal descent, and the expression "Gotiputra, a black serpent for the Pothayas and Śakas," points also to his belonging to the warrior tribe. "The wars to which it alludes," observes the learned scholar, "may have occurred either before the Scythians conquered Mathura—i.e. before the time of Kanishka—or when their domination had passed away. The letters of the inscriptions, which are particularly old-fashioned and may belong to the first century B.C., speak in favour of the first alternative. If the inscription was incised before the Scythian conquest, it also furnishes valuable testimony for the antiquity of the Jaina temple in which it was found."<sup>4</sup>

The next in age to these follows a group consisting of dated inscriptions which explicitly mention Kanishka, Huviṣka and Vāsudeva. There are other dated ones that are taken to belong to their period, although they do not name any of these Kushāna monarchs. "The next group, Nos. XI-XXIV," observes Dr Buhler,

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Konow, E I, xiv, pp. 139, 141.

<sup>2</sup> Buhler, E I, ii, Ins. Nos. IV-X, p. 196.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, Ins. No. XXIII, p. 396.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, p. 394.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

“consists of the dated inscriptions which in my opinion belong to the time of Kanishka, Huvishka and Vāsudeva. Not one shows the name of a king. Nevertheless, I believe that nobody, who carefully compares them with the dated documents, mentioning the three kings, will come to a different conclusion”<sup>1</sup>

These dated Kushāna inscriptions range within the well-known limits from Samvat 4 to Samvat 98.<sup>2</sup> It is not possible to exactly lay down whether the mode of reckoning made use of in these inscriptions is the Samvat era of the Great Vikrama or some other era. “The chronology of this period has been one of the most perplexing problems in the whole of Indian history; and the problem can scarcely be said to be solved positively even now—that is to say, it has not yet been placed beyond all possibility of doubt”<sup>3</sup>. There is a lot of difference of opinion about the crucial point of the Kushāna chronology<sup>4</sup>. All the same, along with several scholars of eminence and repute, we feel that the era made use of in these inscriptions is the one known as the Śaka era, commencing A D 78<sup>5</sup>.

One of the inscriptions on a Jaina pedestal at Kankālī mound runs as follows

“Siddham Mahārājasya Kanishkasya Samvatsara navame Māse prath Dwase 5,” etc.<sup>6</sup>

No doubt as in the Sōdāsa and other Kushāna inscriptions, and “as characteristic of the old Vikrama-Malava era,”<sup>7</sup> we find here also the ancient Indian way of dating, with mention of the season, the number of the month within the season, and the day of the month, but this does not mean that the mode of reckoning adopted by the Kushānas under no circumstances can be connected with the Śaka era. On the other hand there is nothing impossible if what is characteristic of the old Vikrama-Malava era were adopted

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, E I, II, p. 196

<sup>2</sup> Cf. ibid, Cunningham, op cit, p. 14

<sup>3</sup> Rapson, op cit, p. 583

<sup>4</sup> For the various theories of Kanishka's date see Raychaudhuri, op cit, pp. 295 ff

<sup>5</sup> “According to Fergusson, Oldenberg, Thomas, Banerji, Rapson, and many other scholars, Kanishka was the founder of the reckoning commencing A D 78, which came to be known as the Śaka era”—ibid, p. 297. Cf. Hoernle Urāsaga Darśo, Int., p. xi. There is great difference of opinion as to who was the real founder of the Śaka era, though this much is certain—that it must have been some foreign ruler who founded it. As Pandit Ojha remarks, it is not possible to lay down anything for certain regarding the person behind this era. Cf. Ojha, Palaeography of India, pp. 172-173 (2nd ed.)

<sup>6</sup> Cunningham, op cit, Ins. No. IV, Plate XIII, p. 81

<sup>7</sup> Konow, op cit, p. 141

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

by Kanishka and his successors in their Brāhmī records, and this conjecture gains ground when we know that one of the Kushānas is named Vāsudeva, which is a purely Indian name.<sup>1</sup>

Moreover, the adoption of the Vikrama era in connection with the Kushānas also makes it difficult to adjust their position as the successors of the Mathura Satraps. This becomes more so when we know that under Kanishka's dynasty Mathura formed part of one and the same empire.<sup>2</sup> Finally, "the evidence obtained by Sir John Marshall from his excavations of the ancient sites of Takshaśilā proves conclusively that the period of Kanishka's reign must have been somewhere about the end of the first century A.D., and a comparison of this evidence with the statements of Chinese historians and with the dates supplied by inscriptions makes it seem almost certain that Kanishka was the founder of the well-known era which began in 78 A.D."<sup>3</sup> Thus the period concerning the Kushāna inscriptions, which range within the limit from Samvat 4 to Samvat 98, may be approximately laid down as A.D. 82-176.

Of the Kushāna inscriptions two are to be particularly noticed, and of the two the following one is of great importance with respect to the history of the Jaina sect.

"The year 79, the fourth (month of the) rainy-season, the twentieth day—on that (date, specified as) above,—the image, the gift of the female lay-disciple Dinā (Dattā), wife of , was set up at the Vodvī Stūpa, built by the Gods."<sup>4</sup>

From this inscription we learn that an ancient Jaina Stūpa existed in Mathura which, as Buhler rightly remarks, in A.D. 157 (Saka 79) was considered to have been built by the gods—i.e. was so ancient that its real origin had been completely forgotten.<sup>5</sup> The importance of the other lies inasmuch as the history of the Kushāna kings is concerned. It gives us the name of the "Mahārāja Devaputra Huksha (Hushka or Huvishka)," <sup>6</sup> whence we have the "certainty that the name Hushka, which the Rājataranginī has preserved and which still survives in the name of the Kashmirian village Ushkar—Hushkapura—was actually used in ancient times for Huvishaka."<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Cunningham, op cit, p. 41.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Raychaudhuri, op cit, p. 284.

<sup>3</sup> Rapson, op cit, p. 588.

<sup>4</sup> Bühler, op cit, Ins No XX, p. 204.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, p. 198. Cf. Charpentier, op cit, p. 107.

<sup>6</sup> Bühler, op cit, Ins No XXVI, p. 206.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid, p. 198.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Next in age to the Kushāna inscriptions come some three others which, in the opinion of Dr Buhler, belong to the Gupta period,<sup>1</sup> and another inscription which clearly belongs to the eleventh century A D.<sup>2</sup> Mathura would thus seem to have been popularly frequented as a religious site for a period extending continuously over more than a thousand years.<sup>3</sup> Opinions about the Gupta inscriptions we reserve meanwhile till the next chapter. For the present, having dwelt mainly on the political bearing of all these Jaina inscriptions, we shall see if they are equally great for the history of the Jaina church. Their importance in this respect lies in two ways: first, from the standpoint of particular aspects of Jainism or the history of the Jaina church, and secondly, from their general importance in connection with the history of the northern Jains.

Taking the first we find that some such points as the dedication of certain inscriptions to Tirthankaras other than the last one, and the reference to more than one Arhat in the body of the inscriptions, have been already referred to by us in connection with the problem of the historicity of Pārśva and his predecessors. Furthermore, as seen before, some of the records end as follows: "May it be for the welfare and happiness of all creatures," and we have referred to this while considering the Jaina ideal of Ahimsā or non-violence. Besides these few points that are already dealt with by us as points of very great importance in connection with the Mathura inscriptions is their mentioning several female ascetics, and then showing that these persons developed a very considerable activity.<sup>4</sup> There can be no doubt that Aryya-Sangamukā and Aryya-Vasulā in the following inscription are nuns.

अर्यसङ्गमिकय त्रिशीतिन अर्यवसुलये निर्वर्तेन

, etc. ("At the request of the venerable Vasulā, the female pupil of the venerable Sangamukā"), etc.<sup>5</sup> This follows from their title Aryya ("The venerable"), their being called Sisini or Sisini ("female disciples"), and from the statement that the gifts were made at, or by, their Nirvartana, their request or advice. With so much certainty gained, it is not difficult to recognise that the Mathura documents point to the existence of female ascetics among the Jains of Mathura. Thus the Śvetāmbara Caturvīdha

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, op cit, Ins Nos XXXVIII-XL, p 198

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, Ins No XLI, p 219

<sup>3</sup> Cf Growse, IA, vi, p 219

<sup>4</sup> Cf Buhler, E I, i, Ins Nos II, V, VII, XII, XIV, etc, pp 382, 384-386, 388-389

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, Ins No II, p 382

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

Samgha, the community consisting of monks, nuns, lay-brothers and lay-sisters, can be traced as far back as the beginning of the Christian era,<sup>1</sup> and this is further confirmed by a Jaina inscription found by Cunningham on a broken slab at Mathura which reads Caturvarna Samgha <sup>2</sup>

In connection with this fact of the existence of nuns it is worthy of note that only in one case we find a nun who appears as adviser of a layman. Here the venerable Kumāramitrā induces Kumārabhātī, her son during her worldly life, to dedicate an image of Vardhamāna <sup>3</sup>. In all the other inscriptions we find that the nuns exhorted female lay-members of the Samgha to make their donations. Whether Kumāramitrā joined the order after the death of her husband or along with him we cannot positively say, because both the alternatives are equally possible. It may even be this—that she might have done so alone with the consent of her husband during his lifetime <sup>4</sup>. Buhler takes her to be a widow, and remarks “It agrees with this that in modern times, too, the order of Jaina nuns mostly consists of widows, . . . who, according to the custom of most castes, cannot be married, and are got rid of in a convenient manner by being made to take the tonsure” <sup>5</sup>.

As to the number of Kulas and Sākhās appearing in the Mathura inscriptions suffice it to say that they furnish some well-preserved names which can be rightly identified with those appearing in the traditional literature of the Jains.<sup>6</sup> Of these divisions of the Jaina community it seems that the adherents of the Kothya-Kotika Gana must have been more numerous in Mathura than those of the other school. In the words of Dr Buhler “It deserves to be noted that it is the only Gana whose name survived in the fourteenth century A D. Its great age, as well as the great age

<sup>1</sup> It is a characteristic Jaina doctrine that the Srāvakas and Srāvikās form part of the Samgha. On this point the Jainas differ very markedly from the Buddhists.

<sup>2</sup> Our transliteration of the said inscription is as follows—नमो चरहंतानं नमो सिद्धानं स ६२ गृ ३ दि ५ शिष्या चतुर्वर्णीय संघस्य वापिकाये देवि. The inscription is not clear. Some vowel-marks and letters cannot be accurately deciphered. However the date portion and the portion referring to the donation are more or less legible. It is dated in the year 62, and seems to talk of a well, possibly for the चतुर्वर्णी congregation. The donor looks like some female pupil (शिष्या). For the inscription see Cunningham, AS I, xx, Ins No VI, Plate XIII. Cf Buhler, op cit, p 380.

<sup>3</sup> Cf ibid Ins No VII pp 385-386, ibid, p 380.

<sup>4</sup> Cf Burgess, IA, xii, p 278.

<sup>5</sup> Buhler, op cit, p 380.

<sup>6</sup> Cf ibid, pp 378-379.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

of its ramifications, the Brahmadāsika family, the Uccenāgarī<sup>1</sup> branch and the Śrighra district community, is attested by our No IV. The latest possible date of this inscription is Samvat 59, or A.D. 128-129. The preacher then living, the venerable Siha, enumerates four spiritual ancestors, the first among whom must have flourished about the beginning of our era. The Gana was, as we learn, much divided at that early period, and this fact speaks in favour of the statement of the tradition which places its origin about the year 250 B.C.<sup>2</sup>

The language of the inscriptions is a mixed dialect, consisting partly of Prakṛt and partly of Sanskrit words and forms. However, some of the inscriptions are said to be recorded in pure Prakṛt of the Pāli type. As seen before, they show exceedingly archaic characters, and merely on this ground they are taken to be as old as the second and first century B.C. Certain inscriptions of Sir A. Cunningham's collection show the Jaina Prakṛt and Mahārāshtrī forms Pūrvāye or Pūrvaye.<sup>3</sup> It is not possible to say for certain what influenced the language of these documents unless we know exactly the character of the vernacular of Central India used in the first and second centuries A.D. However it seems, as Dr Buhler observes, "to have been in some points more similar to the Jaina Prakṛt and the Mahārāshtrī than to the Pāli and to the language of Aśoka's edicts and of the older Andhra inscriptions."<sup>4</sup>

As regards the origin of this mixed dialect, with Dr Bhandarkar<sup>5</sup> and others the learned scholar remarks that "it is the result of half-educated people trying to express themselves in Sanskrit, of which they possessed an insufficient knowledge and which they were not in the habit of using largely. All the Jaina inscriptions from Mathura were no doubt composed by the monks, who acted as the spiritual directors of the laymen, or by their pupils. Though no inscription has been found in which the author is named, the above inference is warranted by the fact that numerous later documents of the same character contain the names of Yatis who are said to have

<sup>1</sup> This geographical name seems to be identical with the fort of Unchanagara, which belongs to the modern town of Bulandshahr, in the north-western provinces. Cf. Cunningham, ASI, xiv, p. 147.

<sup>2</sup> Buhler, op cit, pp. 379-380. Cf. Klatt, op cit, IA, xi, p. 246. The schools connected with the Koṣṭhika Gana offer no difficulty, as they agree with the corresponding names of the Kalpa-Sūtra. Cf. Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, p. 82.

<sup>3</sup> Cunningham, ASI, iii, Ins. Nos. II, III, VII and XI, pp. 80-83.

<sup>4</sup> Buhler, op cit, p. 376.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Bhandarkar, IA, xii, p. 141.

MATHURA INSCRIPTIONS

composed them or to have written them. The Yatis in the first and second centuries no doubt, just as now, for their sermons and the exposition of their scriptures, used the vernacular of the day, and their scriptures were certainly written in Prākṛt. It was a matter of course that their attempts to write in Sanskrit were not very successful. This theory receives the strongest support from the fact that the character and the number of the corruptions vary almost in every document, and from various single sentences, such as vācakasya ariya—Baladinasya śiṣhyo ariya—Mātridīnah tasya nirvarttanā, which latter reads like a piece from a stupid school-boy's exercise" <sup>1</sup>

As to the general importance of the Mathura inscriptions in connection with the history of Jainism in North India there can be no denying the fact that they afford most unequivocal evidence of the flourishing state of the Jaina religion during the period of Indo-Scythian rule, both before and after the Christian era. They tell us about a widespread and firmly established Jaina community, strongly supported by pious lay-devotees, and very zealous in the consecration and worship of images and shrines dedicated to Mahāvīra and his predecessors. After the Hāthīgumphā inscription of Khāravela the Kankālī mound at Mathura has now given us the most complete and satisfactory testimony that the Jaina religion, even before the beginning of the Christian era, must have been in a condition almost as rich and flourishing as that of Buddha.

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, op cit, p. 377

CHAPTER VI

State of Jainism during the Gupta Period

THE Mathura inscriptions bring us more or less to the end of the Kushānas. Tradition, monuments and inscriptions of this time prove that their sway extended all over North-Western India, probably as far south as the Vindhya, as well as all over the remote regions beyond the Pāmīr passes. There are grounds also for the belief that from the time of Kanishka to the reign of Vāsudeva the Kushāna rule extended over Bihar<sup>1</sup>. This paramount power in North India seems to have come to an end after the death of Vāsudeva, the last Kushāna king who continued to hold extensive territories in India.

"It is evident," observes Smith, "that the Kushān power must have been decadent during the latter part of the long reign of Vāsudeva, and apparently before its close, or immediately after that event, the vast empire of Kanishka obeyed the usual law governing Oriental monarchies and broke up into fragments, having enjoyed a brief period of splendid unity. Probably numerous Rājas asserted their independence and formed a number of short-lived states, but historical material for the third century is so completely lacking that it is impossible to say what or how many those states were."<sup>2</sup>

Nothing definite is recorded concerning the dynasties of Northern India, excluding the Punjab, during the third century and the early part of the fourth. The period between the extinction of the Kushānas and the rise of the Imperial Gupta dynasty, nearly a century later, is one of the darkest in the whole of Indian history.<sup>3</sup> However, with the rise of the Guptas the veil of oblivion is lifted and the history of India regains unity and interest.

With the advent of the Guptas Magadha again came to the

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Smith, op. cit., pp. 274, 276, J. B. S. J., vi, p. 22.

<sup>2</sup> Smith, op. cit., pp. 288, 290.

<sup>3</sup> "The period evidently was one of extreme confusion, associated with foreign invasions from the north-west, which is reflected in the muddled statements of the Purāṇas concerning the Abhiras, Gardabhillas, Śakas, Yavanas, Bāhlikas and other outstanding dynasties named as the successors of the Andhras"—Ibid. p. 290.

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

forefront "Twice in history did it establish a great empire—the Maurya Empire in the fourth and third centuries B C, and the Gupta Empire in the fourth and fifth centuries A D" <sup>1</sup> The extent of the Gupta Empire was by far the greatest that had been seen in India since the days of Aśoka, six centuries before. It comprised all the most populous and fertile countries of North India. It extended from the Brahmaputra on the east to the Jamuna and Chambal on the west, and from the foot of the Himalayas on the north to the Narmada on the south. Beyond these wide limits the frontier kingdoms of Assam and the Gangetic delta, as well as those on the southern slopes of the Himalayas, and the free tribes of Rajputana and Malwa, were attached to the empire by bond of subordinate alliance, whilst almost all the kingdoms of the south had been overrun by the emperor's armies and compelled to acknowledge his irresistible might <sup>2</sup>

As to the state of religion during the Gupta period this much is certain, that officially the kings of this dynasty were Brahmanical Hindus, with special devotion to Vishnu, but followed the usual practice of ancient India in looking with a favourable eye on all varieties of Indian religion. Buddhism and Jainism, though by no means favoured religions, were allowed to continue. The inference seems to be one of non-interference, a universal toleration, with special preference for Vaishnavism <sup>3</sup> For instance Candragupta Vikramāditya or Candragupta II, the fifth in the Gupta list, "although tolerant of Buddhism and Jainism, was himself an orthodox Hindu, specially devoted to the cult of Vishnu" <sup>4</sup>

Besides this eclectic spirit of the Guptas, as seen before, we have from the Mathura inscriptions the epigraphic evidence of their sympathy towards the Jainas. Of these Jaina records three in the opinion of Dr Buhler belong to the Gupta period <sup>5</sup> This is of course indisputable with the following one, which is incised on the base of a large sitting Jina, and which is dated in the reign of Kumāragupta.

"Success! In the year 118, in the victorious reign of the

<sup>1</sup> Rapson, op cit, p. 310

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Smith, op cit, p. 308

<sup>3</sup> "The Mānasāra seems, therefore, to point to the Gupta period, the existence of an empire comprising the whole of India, the popularity of the Brahmanical religion with predilection for the Vishnu cult and non-interference and toleration of Buddhism and Jainism."—Acharya, Indian Architecture according to Mānasāra Śilaprasāstra, p. 194

<sup>4</sup> Smith, op cit, p. 309

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Buhler, E I, II, Ins. Nos. XXXVIII-XL, p. 198

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

supreme lord and supreme king of great kings, the illustrious Kumāragupta, on the twentieth day (of the winter-month Kārttika) —on that (date, specified as) above an image was set up by Sāmādhyā (Śyāmādhyā), daughter of Bhattibhava (and) housewife of the ferry-man (?) Grahamitrapālīa, who had received the command (to make the dedication) from Datilācāyya (Dattilācārya) out of the Kottiya Gana (and) the Vidyādhari-Sākhā ”<sup>1</sup>

With regard to the other two inscriptions, one of them is not in good condition, and so no continuous translation is possible. It apparently records the building or restoration of a temple.<sup>2</sup> The other one, however, on palæographical grounds has been considered by Buhler to belong to the Gupta period. The said inscription, which is incised on the base of a small statue, runs as follows

“ In the fifty-seventh, 57, year, in the third month of winter, on the thirteenth day, on the (date specified) as above ”<sup>3</sup>

To quote the learned scholar “ The shape of the letters, and especially the peculiar method of marking the long and short—i e by turning the former to the right of the consonant and the latter to the left—makes it, I think, impossible to assign No XXXVIII to an earlier period ”<sup>4</sup>

As to the exact period of the above two inscriptions, dated in the years 113 and 57 of the Gupta period, we shall have to refer to the era founded by the Guptas. From the words “ Guptakāla,” “ Guptavarsha,” etc., which were found in the Gupta epigraphical and other records, it appears that this era must have been started by some king of the Gupta dynasty. No recorded evidence has been available up till now for this, but from Samudragupta’s inscription at Allahabad we find that Candragupta I, who was his predecessor, is the first Gupta king who calls himself “ Mahārājādhirāja ”. His predecessors, both Gupta and Ghatotkaca, are entitled simply as “ Mahārāja ”<sup>5</sup>. This, combined with the inscriptional records of the period of Candragupta II, the successor of Samudragupta, of

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, E I, II, Ins No XXXIX, pp 210-211

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, Ins No XL, p 211

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, Ins No XXXVIII, p 210

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, p 198. This is Mr Growse’s No V (IA, VI, p 219). Speaking about it the learned scholar observes “ If the date is really the year 57 of the same era as that employed in the inscriptions of Kanishka and Huvishka, it is the earliest unmistakably Jaina figure yet found in this neighbourhood. I cannot, however, believe but that it is comparatively modern ”—Growse op cit, p 218

<sup>5</sup> “ Who (Samudragupta) was a mortal only in celebrating the rites of the observances of mankind, (but was otherwise) a god, dwelling on the earth—who was son of the son’s

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

the Gupta era 82 to 93,<sup>1</sup> made it possible for the scholar-world to put down the starting-point of the Gupta era from Candragupta I

"His political importance," observes Smith, "was sufficient to warrant him in establishing, after the Oriental manner, a new era dating from his formal consecration or coronation, when he was proclaimed as heir to the Imperial power associated by venerable tradition with the possession of Pataliputra. The first year of the Gupta era, which continued in use for several centuries, and in countries widely separated, ran from February 26, A.D. 320, to March 13, 321, of which dates the former may be taken as that of the coronation of Candragupta I"<sup>2</sup>

This year, A.D. 319-320, as the date of the beginning of the Gupta period has been based on Alberuni's statement that the Gupta era was posterior to the Śaka era by 241 years, or, in other words, the Gupta era begins with A.D. 319-320<sup>3</sup>. This statement of the Arabic traveller has been found correct,<sup>4</sup> and, according to Fleet, the Mandasor inscription confirms this conclusion<sup>5</sup>

Thus, taking A.D. 319 as the beginning of the Gupta era, we find that the two Mathura inscriptions of the year 57 and 118 of the Gupta period will fall in A.D. 386 and 432 respectively. According to the accepted chronology of the Gupta dynasty the first would fall in the reign of Candragupta II, and the other, in confirmation of what is laid down in the inscription itself, in the reign of Kumāragupta I<sup>6</sup>. As seen before, the earliest inscriptional son of the Mahārāja, the illustrious Gupta, who was the son's son of the Mahārāja, the illustrious Ghatotkaca, who was the son of the Mahārājādhirāja, the glorious Candragupta I," etc.—Fleet, C I I, III, Ins No I, pp. 15-16. Cf. Ojha, op cit, p. 174

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Smith, I A, xxxi, p. 265, Ojha, op cit and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Smith, Early History of India, p. 298. Cf. Ojha, op cit, p. 175, Barnett, Antiquities of India, p. 46

<sup>3</sup> "As regards the Guptakāla, people say that the Guptas were wicked, powerful people, and that when they ceased to exist this date was used as the epoch of an era. It seems that Valabha was the last of them, because the epoch of the era of the Guptas falls, like that of the Valabha era, 241 years later than the Śakakāla."—Sachau, Alberuni's India, II, p. 7

<sup>4</sup> "I have shown, so far, that the early Gupta dates and, with them, any others that can be proved to the same uniform series, are to be preferred to the epoch of A.D. 319-320, or thereabouts, brought to notice by Alberuni and substantiated by the Verāwal inscription of Vallabhi-samvat 945"—Fleet, op cit, Int., p. 69. Cf. Dutt, Ancient India, p. 50, Bhandarkar, A Peep into the Early History of India, p. 48. For a detailed discussion about the Gupta era see Fleet, op cit, Int., pp. 16 ff

<sup>5</sup> Cf. ibid, Int., p. 23

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Smith, I A, xxxi, pp. 265-266. Candragupta's rule extended from c. A.D. 380 to c. A.D. 412, and that of Kumāragupta from c. A.D. 413 to c. A.D. 455. Cf. ibid, Smith, Early History of India, pp. 345-346, Bhandarkar, op cit, pp. 48-49, Barnett, op cit, pp. 47-48

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

records of the Guptas begin from the year 82, and hence Dr Buhler has rightly remarked, about the one which we have put down in the reign of Candragupta II, that if his conjecture about it were accepted, "its date, the year 57, is the earliest Gupta date yet found"<sup>1</sup>

Besides these two Mathura inscriptions there are two more Jaina records connected with the Guptas. The first in chronological order is the Udayagiri cave inscription, which refers to the period of the early Gupta kings, and not to the reign of any particular sovereign. The recorded date, however, shows that it also belongs to the time of Kumārāgupta I. It is dated, in words, in the year one hundred and six (A.D. 425-426), on the fifth solar day of the dark fortnight of the month of Kartika<sup>2</sup>. That it is a Jaina inscription is clear from the following translation of a part of the inscription: "He (i.e. Śamkara, whose name occurs in the 6th line) who has conquered the enemies (of religion), (and) is possessed of tranquillity and self-command, caused (and set up) in the mouth of (this) cave, this image of a Jina, richly endowed with (the embellishments of) the expanded hoods of a snake and an attendant female divinity, (and) having the name of Pārśva, the best of Jinas. He is, indeed, the disciple of the Saint, the Ācārya Gosarman" etc.<sup>3</sup>

Thus the object of the Udayagiri cave inscription is to record the installation of an image of the Tirthankara Pārśva or Pārśvanātha at the mouth of the cave. The other inscription, mentioned above, is the Kahāum<sup>4</sup> Stone Pillar Inscription of Skandagupta I, the successor of Kumārāgupta I<sup>5</sup>. The grey-sandstone column on which the inscription is, stands at a short distance to the north of Kahāum village. The inscription itself refers to the reign of the early Gupta king, Skandagupta. It is dated, in words, in the year one hundred and forty-one (A.D. 460-461), and in the month of Jyeshtha<sup>6</sup>. The object of the inscription is clear from the following passage of the record itself:

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, op. cit. and loc. cit.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Fleet, op. cit. Ins. No. LXI, p. 258.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., p. 259. Cf. Hultzsch, J.A., vi, p. 310.

<sup>4</sup> Kahāum or Kahāwam, the ancient Kakubha or Kakubhagrāma of this inscription, is a village about five miles to the west by south of Salampur-Majhauri, the chief town of the Salampur Mahāuli Parganā in Deoria or Dewariyā Tahsil or subdivision of the Gorakhpur district in the north-west provinces.—Fleet, op. cit., p. 66. Cf. Bhagwanlal Indraji, J.A., vi, p. 127.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Smith, op. cit., p. 346. He is said to have succeeded Kumārāgupta I in c. A.D. 455. Cf. ibid., Barnett, op. cit., p. 48.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Fleet, op. cit., Ins. No. XV, p. 66, Bhagwanlal Indraji, op. cit.

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

“He (i.e. Madra, whose name occurs in the 8th line of the inscription), being alarmed when he observed the whole of this world (to be ever) passing through a succession of changes, acquired for himself a large mass of religious merit (and by him),—having set up for the sake of final beatitude (and) for the welfare of (all) existing beings, five excellent (images<sup>1</sup>), made of stone, (of) those who led the way in the path of the Arhats who practise religious observances,—there was then planted in the ground this most beautiful pillar of stone, which resembles the tip of the summit of the best of mountains, (and) which confers fame (upon him)”<sup>2</sup>

Thus the Kahāum inscription records that a certain Madra set up five stone images of Āḍikartris or Tirthankaras, and this is testified by the sculptures of the column itself. Of these the most important are the five naked standing figures, which, according to Dr Bhagwanlal Indraji, represent the five favourite Tirthankaras of the Jainas—Ādinātha, Śāntinātha, Neminātha, Pārśva, and Mahāvīra<sup>3</sup>

Besides these epigraphical evidences of the relations between the Guptas and the Jainas, thanks are due to Muni Jinavijaya<sup>4</sup> that his learned exposition of the Kuvalayamālā<sup>5</sup> throws a lot of light on the history of the Jainas during the Gupta period. Udyotanasūri, the learned author of this piece of the Kathā Sāhitya of the Jainas, introduces himself in the body of the book in a manner which is really characteristic of the times in which the great Sūri lived and had his being. We are told that this interesting Prākṛt Kathā was finished in the year 700 of the Śaka era—i.e. in A.D. 779<sup>6</sup>. This is the age in which we find innumerable immortal works, where very often

<sup>1</sup> Fleet, op cit, p. 68, Bhagwanlal Indraji, op cit, p. 126.

<sup>2</sup> The exact wording of this part of the inscription is as follows *जिनमध्यामहेतामा-
दिकर्तृन् पञ्चेन्द्रास्त्रापिवा* etc. Dr Indraji has translated it as follows “Having established five chief Āḍikartris (Tirthankaras) in the path of the ascetic Arhats” —I.A., x, p. 126. To this the learned scholar makes a note as follows “Āḍikartri—‘Originators,’ the first who lead in the path, but usually applied to the Tirthankaras. See Kalpa-Sūtra, Śakraslava नमोऽस्तु जिनस्य भगवतो महावीरस्य चरमवर्णनस्य Sanskrit trans नमोऽस्तु जिनस्य भगवते महावीरायादिकर्तृ चरमवर्णनस्य”—Ibid, p. 126, n. 16

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p. 126 Cf. Fleet, op cit, p. 66

<sup>4</sup> Jinavijaya, J S S, iii, pp. 169 ff

<sup>5</sup> This is a piece of the narrative literature of the Jainas of the eighth century A.D. It was completed in Jābālpura, situated at present in Marwar, though at one time it was considered to be a part of Gujarat

<sup>6</sup> सगकाले बोलीये वरिमास सटहि सटहि गटहि ।

एगदियेखोहि रइया अवरखेलेख ॥

—Ibid, v. 28, p. 180

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the writers have not even cared to give their names. However, the Kuvalayamālā, with the historical sense rightly ingrained in it, gives us more or less an exact picture of the period and the surroundings in which this work was composed, and the lineage of the great Sūri who brought it into existence. The following are the first few of the important introductory verses that have come down to us<sup>1</sup>

- (१) जन्मि पुहईपसिद्धा दोरिण पहा दोरिण जेय देस जि ।
तन्वन्ति पई कानेय उन्नरावई बुहमणाइण्ये ॥
- (२) मुद्दिअचारुसोहा विअसिअकमलायणा विमलदेहा ।
तन्वन्ति जलहिदइआ सरिआ अइ अंदभाय जि ॥
- (३) तीरमि तीय पयडा यइइया काम रयणसोहिआ ।
जन्वन्ति डिअ भुआ पुहई तिरितीरराइय ॥
- (४) तस गुरु हरिउओ आयरिओ आसि गुनवसाओ ।
तीय कायरीय दिवओ जेय खियेओ तई काले ॥
- (५) तस वि सिसो पयडो महाकई देवउन्नरानो जि ।<sup>2</sup>

The substance of these verses is as follows. "In the world there are two paths and only two countries (Dakṣhīnāpatha and Uttarāpatha), which are widely known. Of these Uttarāpatha is considered to be a country full of scholars. In that country flows the River Candrabhāgā, appearing as if she were the sweetheart of the ocean. On the bank of that river is situated the well-known prosperous town of Pavvaiyā. It is when he was here that Śrītorarāya enjoyed his authority over the earth. Ācārya Harigupta, who was born of the Gupta dynasty, was the Guru of this king, and at that time he was practically residing there. Devagupta who was a great poet, became the pupil of this Ācārya."

These introductory verses of Udyotanasūri are of equal im-

<sup>1</sup> Jinavijaya informs us that only two manuscript copies of Kuvalayamālā are available at present—one in the Government collection at Poona and the other in the Jaina Bhandāra at Jaisalmer. Both copies differ from each other in minor points as well as in points of great historical importance. The learned scholar ascribes these differences to the author himself, and believes that in both the texts they come down from the original sources themselves. Cf. ibid., p. 175.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. ibid., p. 177. In the Poona manuscript the first two verses are not to be found, it begins with the third verse, and the opening portion completely differs from that of the Jaisalmer manuscript, it is as follows. जन्मि पयडा पुरीण । For तीररायेण in the Poona manuscript we find तीररायेण. For the first half of the fifth verse we find the following whole verse in the Poona copy

[तस] बहुकलाकुसलो सिद्धान्तविद्याओ कोई दसओ ।
आयरि देवगुओ न[स] जावि विअरए कियो ॥

—Ibid

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

portance both from the standpoint of the Jaina community in the north and of Indian history in general. The King Toramāna, or Torarāya, referred to in the third strophe, is none else but the powerful leader of the Hūnas,<sup>1</sup> who is known to have led the Hūna hordes which had burst through the north-western passes and spread in a destructive flood all over Northern India. There is no historical fallacy committed in taking this Torarāya for the Hūna chieftain Toramāna, because there is only one टोरामोका Toramāna—the Toramāna enjoying the sovereignty of this earth—in all Indian history. He seems to be one of the very important figures of his time, because, as just remarked, it was he who was at the back of the Hūna invasion and the consequent break-up of the Gupta Empire. Leaving Central Asia he and his followers poured into India, and having conquered the Punjab and Delhi came down as far inland as the country of Malwa in Central India. To quote Vincent Smith: "The leader in this invasion of India, which, no doubt, continued for years, was a chieftain named Toramāna, who is known to have been established as ruler of Mālwa in Central India prior to A.D. 500. He assumed the style and titles of an Indian 'sovereign of Māhārājas', and Bhānugupta, as well as the king of Vallabhī and many other local princes, must have been his tributaries."<sup>2</sup>

Naturally this Hūnādhipati, the leader of the Āryans of Central Asia, must have brought about a great revolution in the political, religious and social conditions of India. No doubt the period of his domination was rather short, but when he died—in the first decade of the sixth century A.D.—the Indian kingdom which he had acquired was consolidated sufficiently to pass to his son and successor, Mahāvīra Mihirakula.<sup>3</sup> Anyhow it is not yet known for certain to antiquarians what was his capital. From various sources we know this much—that Sākala, the modern Sialkot in the Punjab, was the metropolis of his successor, Mihirakula.<sup>4</sup> However, according to the Kuvalayamālā tradition, Toramāna's headquarters was

<sup>1</sup> The Hūnas were a tribe of Āryans in Central Asia. They shattered the Gupta Empire, and dominated a large part of it for a short period. The dominion of the Hūnas did not long survive the defeat and death of Mihirakula, the son and successor of Toramāna, and this can be put down approximately in the middle of the sixth century A.D. For further information about the Hūnas see Ojha, History of Rajputana, I, pp. 53 ff., 126 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Smith, op cit, p. 335. Cf. Barnett, op cit, p. 49.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Smith, op cit and loc cit, Ojha, op cit, p. 128.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Smith, op cit and loc cit, Ojha, op cit, p. 120, Barnett, op cit, p. 50.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Pavvayā, situated on the bank of the River Candrabhāgā, now known to us as the Chenab

It is really difficult to identify this Pavvayā—having in Sanskrit some such form as Pārvatikā or Pārvatī—with any definite place in the map of Northern India. Nevertheless, from Yuan Chwang's Travels in India we get to know that from Mou-lo-San-pu-lu—i.e. Multan—the pilgrim went north-east about 700 li to Po-fa-to country.<sup>1</sup> “The Po-fa-to of this passage,” observes Watters, “is supposed to be for Po-la-fa-to—that is, Parvata.”<sup>2</sup> Can we infer from this that Parvata of the Chinese traveller may be Pavvayā, the capital of Toramāna? However, there is no one opinion about this in the scholar-world.<sup>3</sup> Suffice it to say for our purpose that, according to the Jainas, the capital of Toramāna was Pavvayā, and that it remains to be seen as to where exactly this place can be located in the map of Northern India.

What we are chiefly concerned with is the fact of some Ācārya Harigupta being the Guru of the great Toramāna. The significance of this note of the Kuvalayamālā is really great. Up till now, barring a few inscriptions, to which we have already referred above, there is practically nothing which could enlighten us about the state of the Jainas during the Gupta period. A foreign and triumphant ruler like Toramāna having a Jaina Ācārya as his Guru is a matter of no little importance for Jaina history. Howsoever insignificant it may seem, it is the basis on which we can infer that, as with the Saisunāga, Nanda and the Maurya periods, so also in the golden age of Indian history Jaina Sādhus enjoyed the privilege of becoming Rājagurus.

Coming next to Harigupta, the great Ācārya, it seems he must have been a man of great importance in his time. He is introduced to us as one belonging to the Gupta dynasty. It is very difficult to say whether he belonged to the royal dynasty of the Guptas or to any other ordinary dynasty of that name. There is hardly any evidence before us on which we can make such an

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Watters, Yuan Chwang's Travels in India, II, p. 255, Beal, Si-Yu-Ki, II, p. 275.

<sup>2</sup> Watters, op. cit. Cf. Beal, op. cit.

<sup>3</sup> According to Vincent Smith Po-fa-to (Parvata) indicates the reign of Jamū (Jammoo), in the south of Kashmir state as at present constituted. Cf. Watters, op. cit., p. 342. Cunningham identifies Po-la-fa-to with Shorkot, though he believes that the position directed by the traveller agrees with the site of Jhang, on the Chenab. Cunningham, Ancient Geography of India, pp. 233-234. In the opinion of Dr. Fleet, Po-fa-to cannot be anything else but the ancient place of Harppā.—Fleet, J R A.S., 1907, p. 650.

COIN OF "SRI M III IR IY I H IRU LPTA"

Enlarged four diameters

By kind permission of the Department of Coins and Medals, British Museum assertion. However, according to Jinavijaya,<sup>1</sup> it is a common convention with the Jaina clergy that when a member of some particularly good family or dynasty joins the order, a note is carefully made to that effect for the glory of their religion. Generally the Jaina Sādhus during their preachings before the laymen of the Samgha mention such facts of their ecclesiastical history, and thus try to impress upon the mind of the audience the greatness of the religion and the following of Lord Mahāvīra. Thus if we were to infer from this that the Vamsa of Harigupta, particularly noted by Udyotanasūri, who came about three centuries after the great Toramāna and his Jaina Guru, must be some respectable and highly esteemed dynasty, such inference need not be considered as far-fetched or unworthy of historical notice. On the other hand the very fact that Harigupta was so closely connected with the Hūna Samrāt greatly confirms the above hypothesis. No doubt the tradition of a member of the royal dynasty of the Guptas becoming a Jaina Sādhu may seem a little strange and unbelievable, but there is no reason for any such attitude. Furthermore, the same introductory verses of Udyotanasūri tell us that Harigupta had a pupil named Devagupta, who was a great poet. This Devagupta is addressed later on in his preface by the Sūri as Rājarshi (Royal Saint) of the Gupta dynasty.<sup>2</sup> It is clear from this that Devagupta must be somebody from the royal family of the Guptas. No doubt, before all these facts can be taken as historical truths, we stand in need of some more definite contemporary evidence which can lead us to this conclusion. However, there can be no denying the usefulness of these facts as the basis for any historical structure such as this.

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

With all this, when we have come so far we shall go a step further, and see if it is possible to identify either Harigupta or Devagupta with any member of the royal dynasty of the Guptas. Whatever historical records of the Guptas have been collected as yet, we nowhere find the name of Harigupta. However, in 1894, Cunningham found a copper coin in Ahicchatra on one side of which there is a flower vase (Kalaśa) on a pedestal, and on the other side are the following words "Śrī Mahārāja Harigupta."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jinavijaya, op cit, p 183

<sup>2</sup> लो जयद् देवगुप्तो षष्ठे गुप्ताय रायविराजि—Chaturvijaya, Kuvalayamālā-Kathā (Jaina Ātmānanda Sabhā), Int., p 6

<sup>3</sup> Cf Allan, Catalogue of Indian Coins, Gupta Dynasties, p 152 and Plate XXIV, 16, Cunningham, Coins of Medieval India, p 19, Plate II, 6. It may be mentioned here that, as Jinavijaya has rightly remarked, Kalaśa is one of the popular symbols of the Jainas. Cf Jinavijaya, op cit, p 184

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

From the form and shape of the letters, and from the comparison of the name given on it, it is believed by those interested in numismatics that the coin must have been struck by some king of the Gupta dynasty<sup>1</sup> However, it is not possible to trace the relations of this Harigupta with any of the Gupta kings. On epigraphic grounds it seems that he must have existed in the middle of the sixth century of the Vikrama era.<sup>2</sup> Thus from the standpoints of the date and the place where it was found the description of the coin meets with that of the Jaina Harigupta. The latter comes from the district of Punjab, and being the contemporary of Toramāna he also belongs to the middle of the sixth century of the Vikrama era. Thus, considering the similarity of the date, the place-name and the dynasty, there is nothing wrong if the Harigupta of the coin and that of the Jaina tradition are one and the same person.

Coming to Devagupta we are faced with a similar difficulty. Nevertheless from Bāna's Harshacarita, which is considered to be "a very early attempt at an historical romance,"<sup>3</sup> we know that on the throne of Malwa sat a king, a contemporary of the great king of Kanauj and Thāneśar, who was defeated by Harshavardhana's elder brother, Rājyavardhana, because the Malwa king was declared the enemy of Grahavarman, the king of Kanyākubja, who was married to the sister of Harshavardhana.<sup>4</sup> This king of Malwa has been identified by Dr Buhler with the Devagupta of the Madhuban inscription.<sup>5</sup> Here arises the question whether it is possible to identify Devagupta of the Jaina tradition with the king of Malwa spoken of in the Harshacarita. The difficulty that comes

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Cunningham, op cit, pp. 18-19. "The form of the letter 'H' is peculiar to the Guptas"—Ibid, p. 19.

<sup>2</sup> "Coin of Harigupta seems to belong to the fifth century, from its epigraphy"—Allan, op cit, p. cv.

<sup>3</sup> Cowell and Thomas, Harshacarita, Int., p. viii.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Ibid, Int., pp. xi-xii. "the illustrious Rājyavardhana, by whom, playing his whip in the battle, the Kings Devagupta and others—who resembled wicked horses—were all subdued with averted faces"—Buhler, E I, 1, p. 74. Cf. Barnett, op cit, p. 52, Mookerji (Radhakumud), Harsha, pp. 16-19, 53.

<sup>5</sup> "Assuming the correctness of Bāna's account it may be suggested that Devagupta was the name of the Mālava king. The latter certainly was the chief foe, and the conquest of his kingdom is attested by the further statement of Bāna that Bhandin, who had accompanied Rājyavardhana, brought the booty from Mālava to Harsha when the latter had reached the territory of Kumāra-Bhāskaravarman on his expedition of revenge against the King Gauda. I may add that the word Mālava need not refer here or in the other passages of the Śrīharshacarita to the Mālava in Central India. There was another Mālava in the Punjab, much nearer to Thāneśar, which may be meant"—Buhler, op cit, p. 70. Cf. Mookerji (Radhakumud), op cit, pp. 25, 50 ff.

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

in the way of such an identification is that of the chronological adjustment of both the Devaguptas

Among the various dates of Toramāna the latest possible is that of about A D 516. Even if this is accepted there remains a difference of more than seventy-five years, which can be adjusted only on the following suppositions: that Toramāna may have died a few years later than c. A D 516, that Harigupta may have lived a long time after the death of his royal patron, and that Devagupta may have joined the order in the last days of his Guru. Whatever it may be, we need not stress this point any further, because that would be going beyond the period which we have marked out for our examination, and moreover, about the tradition left to us by Udyotanasūri there is no choice for us but to await the further revelations of archæology for a final answer. Thus the fact that also in the Gupta period Jainism was a living religion is evident from all that we have seen up till now. This is clear from "a multitude of inscriptions, which are almost all either Buddhist or Jaina," and from the Gupta princes being "perfectly tolerant of both Buddhism and Jainism" <sup>1</sup>

One thing still remains to be seen, and that is the rise of the dynasty of Vallabhī towards the close of the fifth century A D. This rise of the Vallabhīs more or less coincides with the end of the golden age of the Guptas, which at the most comprised a period of a century and a half. The death of Kumāragupta I, which can be definitely fixed as having occurred early in 455, marks the beginning of the decline and fall of the empire, while in the reign of Kumāragupta II began the actual break-up of the Gupta Empire <sup>2</sup>

This new dynasty, which lasted until about A D 770, was established at Vallabhī in the east of the peninsula of Saurāshtra (Kathiawar), by a chief named Bhatārka, "who belonged to a clan called Maitraka, probably of foreign rule" <sup>3</sup>. This Bhatārka of the Vallabhī dynasty had four sons, all of whom are included by Captain Wilberforce-Bell and others in their list of Vallabhī kings. Of

<sup>1</sup> Smith, op cit, pp 318, 320

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p 346 "the power of the Guptas continued to wane, and deprived of possessions and powers, at the end of the sixth century A D, they died out"—Wilberforce-Bell, The History of Kathiawad, p 37

<sup>3</sup> Smith, op cit, p 332 "Meanwhile, about the year A D 470, the history of Saurāshtra again underwent a change. In this year Skanda Gupta died, and the bards relate that at the time, one Bhattārka, of the Maitraka clan, was Commander-in-Chief of the army. This man came to Saurāshtra and, having declared his independence, established a dynasty which lasted for nearly 300 years"—Wilberforce-Bell, op and loc cit cf Barnett, op cit, p 49

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

these Dhruvasena I, the fourth in the list, was naturally the third son of the founder of this dynasty<sup>1</sup> We particularly refer to him because, along with Devardhigani, the high-priest of the Jaina church of his time, he marks the end of the unrecorded period of Jainism in North India Beyond this we are assured by Smith that "the earlier kings of Vallabhi do not appear to have been independent, and were doubtless obliged to pay tribute to the Huns"<sup>2</sup> Thus Dhruvasena must also be a dependent potentate under the Hūnas, because the period of his rule has been put down by Charpentier and others as terminating about A D 526<sup>3</sup> This date becomes more of a certainty on the authority of Smith and Wilberforce-Bell that Bhatārka founded the dynasty in c 490 A D<sup>4</sup> The two brothers that intervened between Bhatārka and Dhruvasena might have ruled for a short time, and thus Dhruvasena I might have succeeded to the throne in about A D 526 This is further strengthened when we know that Dharasena II, the seventh in the Vallabhi list, rules from A D 569<sup>5</sup>

Of the great Jaina council under the protection of the Vallabhīpati Dhruvasena we shall speak in the next chapter. What need be said at present is that the canonical and other literature of the Jainas was put down in writing during this period, and thus the unrecorded period of Jaina history was brought to an end It is significant to note that this important event of Jaina history is connected also with the Gupta period That by this time the Jainas had more or less spread all over India is a fact which cannot be denied The inscriptions referring to the Jaina communities become very numerous from the sixth century A D onwards

<sup>1</sup> Cf Wilberforce-Bell, op cit, pp 38-39, Barnett, op cit, pp 40-50

<sup>2</sup> Smith, op and loc cit "This dynasty was at first subordinate to the Guptas and then to the Hūnas, and later became independent"—Barnett, op cit, p 49

<sup>3</sup> Dhruvasena I, Maitraka, king of Vallabhi, was reigning A D 526-540—Barnett, op cit, p 50 "Now, as King Dhruvasena I of Vallabhi is supposed to have succeeded to the throne in A D 526"—Charpentier, Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, Int*, p 16 This date of the learned scholar is based on the date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāna in 497 B C, and on 993 A V, as the date of the redaction of the Jaina canon The other date for the redaction of the canon is A D 980, and, counting upon this, the date of the council comes to c A D 514 Cf Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, Int, p 15, Farquhar, Religious Literature of India, p 163 The difference between these two dates is based on this ground, that in 980 A V the Jaina canon was put in a definite form and in 993 A V Kalpa Sūtra was read before the Samgha, under the patronage of Dhruvasena I in Ānandapura नवसप्ततित्तनवर्षे कल्यस्स युसके लिखनं, नवसप्ततित्तनवर्षे च कल्यस्स पर्वेष्टाचनेति—Kalpa-Sūtra, Subōdhukā-Tīkā, sūt 148, p. 126 For the two dates of 980 A V and 993 A V see also Jacobi, S B E, xxii., p 270

<sup>4</sup> Cf Smith, op and loc cit, Wilberforce Bell, op cit, p 38

<sup>5</sup> Cf ibid, p 39 "Dharasena II was reigning 571-589"—Barnett, op cit, p. 51.

STATE OF JAINISM DURING THE GUPTA PERIOD

Huen-Tsiang, who travelled through India after the Gupta Empire had come to an end, found them spread through the whole of India, and even beyond its boundaries.<sup>1</sup> It would be very interesting indeed to follow this scattered information about Jainism, yet such lucubrations would be beyond our purpose. The documents quoted suffice, however, to confirm the assertion that during the first five centuries after Mahāvira's Nirvāna both the statements of Buddhist tradition and real historical sources give evidence to the existence of the Jainas as an important religious community independent of Buddhism, and that there are among the historical sources some which entirely clear away the suspicion that the tradition of the Jainas themselves is in any way falsified.

<sup>1</sup> "Huen Tsiang's note on the appearance of the Nirgrantha or Digambar in Kapiśhi points to the fact that they had, in the north-west at least, spread their missionary activity beyond the borders of India"—Bühler, Indian Sect of the Jainas, pp 3-4, n 4, Beal, op cit, 1, p 55

CHAPTER VII

Jaina Literature of the North

THE Jainas have developed at all times a rich literary activity. "This literature is extremely extensive and full of interest. Indian and even European libraries contain a huge mass of Jaina manuscripts, which hitherto have not yet been utilised"<sup>1</sup> The Jaina authors belong mostly to the priest-class. They are monks who make use of the four months of the rainy-season, during which time they are forbidden to wander about, for literary purposes. To the prevalence of this clerical element among the writers there corresponds the one in the substance and contents of the Jaina literature. It has in the main points a religious character, in which it meets also with the Brahmanical and Buddhistical literatures. Theological and philosophical treatises, legends of saints, religious tracts, and songs of praise in honour of the Tirthankaras are the principal items in it. The religious atmosphere also predominates in the works of profane contents, as in scientific books, in poems and in works of the narrative literature, in dramas and in inscriptions.

The period of Jaina history under our consideration is solely concerned with the unrecorded state of its literature. Devardhigani stands like a lighthouse and marks the end of this period, in which the canonical literature of the Jainas known as the Siddhānta mostly predominates. However, by way of a few preliminary remarks regarding the whole literature of the Jainas, it may be mentioned here that the subjects treated of in this huge literature are very multifarious. "First of all, there is the Siddhānta, accompanied by a very extensive literature of commentaries. Moreover, there is a very rich scientific literature. The Jainas have created special systems of dogmatics, of logics, and of philosophy, on the other hand, they very successfully cultivated all the Brahmanical sciences. They composed grammars and dictionaries of Sanskrit as well as of Prākṛt. There are even some grammars and vocabularies of the Gujarati, and a vocabulary of the Persian language Numerous are the Jaina treatises on poetics, on metrics, and on Nīti in its two branches—the Rājanīti or statecraft, and the Sāmānyanīti, which contains rules for the clever conduct of life For the education of princes, Jaina authors wrote treatises on the sciences of elephants, of horses, of war-carriages and of bows, and on erotics; and for the use of the rest of the population they composed works on magic and on astrology, on omina and portenta, and on oneirocritics, which has played so important a rôle in Indian life They even composed manuals of architecture and of music, and treatises on gold and on jewels They are the creators of a very extensive popular literature ”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hertel, On the Literature of the Śvetāmbaras of Gujarat, p. 4

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

With these introductory remarks we come to the Siddhānta, or the Holy Scriptures of the Jainas, which according to them come within the period under our consideration As seen before, and as we shall see during the course of this chapter, we cannot disbelieve the traditions of the Jainas about their literary heritage However for the present we give below the list of the scriptures of the Jaina canon which has been more or less accepted by scholars like Weber,<sup>2</sup> Winternitz,<sup>3</sup> Charpentier<sup>4</sup> and others

I Fourteen Puṣpas or Pūrvas (not extant)

- 1 Uppāya (Utpāda)
- 2 Aggeniya or Aggāniya (? Agrāyanīya)<sup>5</sup>
- 3 Vīriyappavāya (Vīryappravāda)
- 4 Atthinatthippavāya (Astīnāstīppravāda).
- 5 Nānappavāya (Jñānapravāda)
- 6 Saccappavāya (Satyappravāda)
- 7 Āyappavāya (Ātmapravāda).
- 8 Kammappavāya (Karmappravāda)
- 9 Paccakkhānappavāya (Pratyākhyānapravāda)
- 10 Vijjānuppavāya (Vidyānuppravāda)
- 11 Avamjha (Avandhya)
- 12 Pānāum (Prānāyuh)
- 13 Kīriyāvīsāla (Kīryāvīsāla)
- 14 Logavindusāra (Lokavindusāra)

<sup>1</sup> Hertel, op cit, pp 5-6

<sup>2</sup> Cf Weber, I A, xvii, pp 279 ff, 330 ff, xviii, pp 181 ff, 360 ff, xix, pp 62 ff, xx, pp 18 ff, 170 ff, 365 ff, and xxi, pp 14 ff, 106 ff, 177 ff, 210 ff, 293 ff, 327 ff, 369 ff

<sup>3</sup> Cf Winternitz, Geschichte der Indischen Literatur, ii, pp 291 ff

<sup>4</sup> Cf Charpentier, op cit, Int, pp 9 ff, Belvalkar, Brahma-Sūtras of Bādarāyana, pp 107 ff

<sup>5</sup> Cf Charpentier, op cit, Int, p 12

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

II. Twelve Angas .

1. Āyāra (Ācāra)
2. Sūyagada (Sūtrakṛta).
3. Thāna (Sthāna)
4. Samavāya
5. Viyāhapannatti (Vyākhyāprajñapati), mostly called Bhagavati.
6. Nāyādhammakahāo (Jñātādharmakathāh)
7. Uvāsagadasāo (Upāsakadaśāh)
8. Antagaḍadasāo (Antakṛddasāh).
9. Anuttarovavāyadasāo (Anuttaraupapātikadaśāh)
10. Panhāvāgaranāim (Praśnavyākaranāni)
11. Vivāgasuyam (Vipākāśrutam)
12. Dutthivāya (Drṣṭivāda), no longer extant

III. Twelve Upāngas (corresponding to the twelve Angas)

1. Ovavāya (Aupapātika)
2. Rāyapasenaṇṇa (Rājaprasāṇṇa)
3. Jīvābhigama
4. Pannavanā (Prajñāpanā)
5. Sūryapannatti (Sūryaprajñapti).
6. Jambūddivapannatti (Jambudvīpaprajñapti)
7. Candapannatti (Candraprajñapti).
8. Niryāvali
9. Kappāvadamsiāo (Kalpāvatamsikāh)
10. Pupphāo (Pushpikāh)
11. Pupphacūhāo (Pushpacūlikāh)
12. Vanhidasāo (Vrsnidasāh)

IV Ten Painnas or Prakīrnāni

1. Causarana (Catuhśarana).
2. Āurapaccakkhāna (Āturapratyākhyāna).
3. Bhattaparinnā (Bhaktapariyñā).
4. Samthāra (Samstāra)
5. Tandulaveyyāṇṇa (? Tandulavautālīka).
6. Candāvijjhaya (Candravedhyaka)
7. Devindatthava (Devendrastava)
8. Ganivijjā (Ganitavidyā)
9. Mahāpaccakkhāna (Mahapratyākhyāna).
10. Vīratthava (Virastava)

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

V Six Chedasūtras

- 1 Nisīha (Nisītha).
- 2 Mahānisīha (Mahānisītha)
- 3 Vavahāra (Vyavahāra)
- 4 Āyāradasāo (Ācāradasāh), or Desāsuyaskhandha
(Dasāśrutaskhandha)
- 5 Brhatkalpa
- 6 Pañcakalpa

VI Four Mūlasūtras

- 1 Uttarajjayana (Uttarādhyayana)
- 2 Āvassaya (Āvaśyaka)
- 3 Dasaveyāhya (Daśavarkāhika)
- 4 Pindaniryutti (Pindaniryukti)

VII Two Solitary Texts

- 1 Nandisutta (Nandīsūtra)
- 2 Anyuogadārasutta (Anuyogadvārasūtra)

Al<sup>1</sup> these scriptures form the canon of the Svetāmbaras alone, because they are disowned by the Digambaras. This tradition of the latter is connected with the great famine which broke out in Magadha during the glorious days of Hindu rule under Candragupta Maurya. After the emigration of Bhadrabāhu and his followers to the south it so happened that the holy texts of the Jainas were threatened with the danger of falling into oblivion, and a council was called by Sthūlabhadra and his followers, who had preferred to remain at home, early in the third century B.C., at Pātaliputra, a place historic in the annals of their order and at the same time the capital of the Mauryan Empire. This council of the Jainas, as Dr Charpentier tells us, "may have discharged pretty much the same functions as are recorded of the first Buddhist council"<sup>2</sup>. A canon was fixed by the council including both the Angas and the Pūrvas, and this is undoubtedly the first origin of the Siddhānta.<sup>3</sup> Now the monks who had returned home from the south were by no means satisfied with these arrangements. They refused to acknowledge the canon, and declared that the Pūrvas and the Angas were lost to them<sup>1</sup> Thus here lies the basis of the belief of the Digambaras—that what exists as the Siddhānta of the Jains is not in its original form We shall once again see presently that this tradition on their part carries very little weight considering the grounds in favour of the Svetāmbara belief

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int., p. 14

<sup>2</sup> "Thus, according to Sthūlabhadra's tradition, a canon was established including the ten first Pūrvas and Angas, as well as other scriptures which are recorded to have been composed by Bhadrabāhu—c g the Kalpa Sūtra."—Ibid. "Therefore a council was called at Pātaliputra in which the 11 Angas were put together and the rest of the 14 Pūrvas were incorporated into the 12th Anga, the Diṣṭhivāda."—Winternitz, op cit, p. 298. Cf. Farquhar, Religious Literature of India, p. 75, Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, Int., pp. 11, 15. For Hemacandra's version about the synod at Pātaliputra see Parīkṣitaparvan, Canto IX, vv. 55-76, 101-103.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

However, before we come to this we shall refer to the next Jaina council, that met at Vallabhī in Gujarat under Devardhiganin, the Buddhaghosha of Jaina literary history, in the beginning of the sixth century A D What happened after the first great council in Magadha is that in course of time the canon of the Svetāmbaras fell into disorder, and was even in danger of being lost Therefore, as seen before, in the year 980 or 993, after the death of Mahāvira, “a famous teacher, Devardhiganin, called the Kṣamāśramana, who saw that the sacred lore was in danger of becoming obsolete—no doubt because of the scarcity of manuscripts—convoked a second great council at Vallabhī”<sup>2</sup> The twelfth Anga, which contained the Pūrvas, was already lost by that time, and whatever could be available was put down in a definite written form Thus Devardhiganin’s activity must have consisted only in bringing about a canon of holy scriptures partly with the help of old manuscripts and partly on the ground of oral tradition<sup>3</sup> As most of the modern scholars believe, we need no more doubt that the whole of the external form of the Siddhānta dates from the days of Dhruvasena, under whose patronage the great council was called

Now, coming to the Digambara tradition of the Jaina Siddhānta being completely lost or forgotten immediately after the great famine in Magadha, we find that there is no evidence available on which we can make such a sweeping statement. Before we proceed any further one thing must be noted down—that even the Digambaras agree to the fact that the first disciples of Mahāvira knew the

<sup>1</sup> For the famine in Magadha, etc, see Charpentier, op cit, Int, pp 13-15, Winternutz, op cit and loc cit

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int, p 15 Cf Winternutz, op cit, pp 293-294, Jacobi, SBE, xxii, Int, pp xxvii xxxviii According to another tradition the Siddhānta was issued “at the hands of a council in Mathura under Śrī Skandilācārya”—Weber, IA, xvii, p 282

<sup>3</sup> “Pūrvam sarvasiddhāntānām pāthanam ca mukhapāthena ’vā ’nti”—Jacobi Kalpa-Sūtra, p 117 Cf Winternutz, op cit, p 294 For the work done and the exact method adopted by the redactors of this council see Charpentier, op cit, Int, pp 16 ff “To provide every teacher, or at least Upāśraya, with copies of the sacred books, Devardhiganin must have issued a large edition of the Siddhānta”—Jacobi, SBE, xxii, Int, p xxxviii

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

Pūrvas and the Angas "They hold the twelve Angas—the Dvādaśāṅgī—in as high esteem as the Śvetāmbaras " <sup>1</sup> Now what remains to be confirmed is that the original Siddhānta was not lost for ever. The epigraphic evidence that we can produce for this is that of the Mathura inscriptions. As we have seen, the number of Kulas and Sākhās appearing in these records can very well be identified with those appearing in the writings which are "proclaimed by the Digambaras to be late and worthless works, although they seem to make use of them to a certain extent " <sup>2</sup> Furthermore, the Mahāvīra legend is also reproduced in the Mathura sculptures as it appears in our texts, and the Jaina monks are mentioned with the title Vācaka <sup>3</sup>—i.e. lecturer or preacher. This latter fact, according to Dr Winternitz, gives epigraphical evidence to the fact that there must have existed the holy scriptures of the Jainas even in the beginning of the Christian era <sup>4</sup>. Moreover, as seen before, the fact that as an alternative the Jaina monks could go about naked is also found in the Śvetāmbara texts. This shows they did not dare to make arbitrary changes in the text, but handed them down as true as possible. Finally, it is a great proof for the authenticity of the Jaina tradition that in many remarkable details it exactly corresponds with the Buddhistic tradition.

The total absence in the most important parts of the canon of any ideas belonging to Greek astronomy, according to some scholars supplies a decisive proof of the suggestion that the texts must have remained almost unaltered at least since the very first century of our era <sup>5</sup>. "Moreover, the metrical parts of the Jaina canon suggested to such an acute observer and such an expert on Hindu metres as Jacobi a terminus a quo, for as a general rule all the metres used by the Jainas in their canonical scriptures, whether Vaitāliya, Tristubh or Āryā, show types that are clearly more <sup>1</sup> Cf Buhler, I A, vii, p. 29. "However, we are told by the Śvetāmbaras, as well as the Digambaras, that besides the Angas there existed other and probably older works, called Pūrvas, of which there were originally fourteen"—Jacobi, op cit, Int., p. xlv.

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int., p. 11. Cf Buhler, op and loc cit.

<sup>3</sup> वाचकस्य सर्ववह्निनस्य —Bühler, E I, i, Ins No III, p. 382. Cf ibid, Ins Nos IV, VII, etc., pp. 383-386.

<sup>4</sup> Cf Winternitz, op and loc cit.

<sup>5</sup> Cf Charpentier, op cit, Int., p. 25. "But an argument of more weight is the fact that in the Siddhānta we find no traces of Greek astronomy. In fact the Jaina astronomy is a system of incredible absurdity, which would have been impossible if its author had had the least knowledge of the Greek science. As the latter appears to have been introduced in India about the third or the fourth century A.D., it follows that the sacred books of the Jainas were composed before that time"—Jacobi, op cit, Int., p. xl.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

developed than those of the Pāli canon, and at the same time distinctly older than those of the Lalitā Vistāra and other northern Buddhist texts. Supported by this very powerful evidence, Jacobi concluded that the most important and oldest portions of the Siddhānta must have been fixed during a period lying between the Tripiṭaka and the first centuries of our era, say, roughly, between 300 B.C. and A.D. 200; and I, for my part, consider this conclusion quite justified.”<sup>1</sup>

Besides all this there are certainly many other passages scattered through the whole of the canon which might lead us to draw further conclusions about the period of the Siddhānta of the Jains. An enumeration of all such passages is out of the question, but we shall mention one instance that has a certain interest for the question of the date. To put it in the words of Dr Charpentier: “In the second Upāṅga, the Rāyapasenayjja, the interesting relations of which to the Pāyāsisutta of the Dīgha Nikāya were detected and dealt with by Professor Leumann, it is stated in a certain passage that any Brahmins who have committed certain crimes should be stigmatised—i.e. the image of a dog (Sunakha) or a Kundūya should be branded upon their foreheads. This coincides with Kāutilya, p. 220, who prescribes that four marks should be used for theft a dog (Svan), for incest (Gurutaḥpa) a pudendum muliebri (Bhaga), for manslaughter a headless trunk (Kabandha), and for consuming intoxicating liquor a Madyadhva. But this rule does not occur in Manu and the later law books, where corporal punishments on Brahmins are not permissible. This usage had consequently become obsolete after the times of Kāutilya, and the conclusion is that the Jain text where it occurs must be nearer to the time of Kāutilya than to that of the later Dharmaśāstras.”<sup>2</sup>

Thus from all that has been seen one thing is certain—that the present Siddhānta of the Svetāmbaras is no creation of later times, and that with all the additions and subtractions at various places it is based on the original texts. The question as to how far these texts can be chronologically traced is rather dubious, though of great interest. However there would be nothing wrong if in their definite forms they are traced back to the council of Pāṭaliputra, and in certain individual cases to a still earlier date.<sup>3</sup> We shall

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int., pp. 25-26; Jacobi, op cit, Int., pp. xlii-ff.

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int., p. 81.

<sup>3</sup> “I do not consider that the principal sacred scriptures represent even in their present shape the actual canon fixed at the council of Pāṭaliputra.”—Ibid. Cf. Jacobi, op cit, Int., pp. ix, xliii.

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

now consider in brief the separate works of the canon and, though rather superficially, shall mark their contents side by side with some points of importance individually attached to them.

First in order comes the group of the fourteen Pūrvas. They form the oldest portion of the canon, and even the Svetāmbaras themselves tell us that they have been irrevocably lost along with Dṛṣṭivāda, the twelfth Anga, in which these oldest works were incorporated at the time when they ceased to exist independently of the Anga literature. As seen before, the Pūrvas were suggested by Mahāvira himself, while his disciples, the Ganadharas or apostles, composed the Angas. "This tradition," observes Dr Charpentier, "rejects the authorship of the mythic saint Rsabha, and is certainly right in ascribing the original tenets of the canon to Mahāvira himself. As a general account of the facts, the statement that the main part of the canon originated with Mahāvira and his immediate successors may probably be trusted."<sup>1</sup>

After the Pūrvas come the Angas, the single members of which are marked by certain formal peculiarities, which prove a connection closer in the case of some than in that of others. Taking the first of the twelve Angas—namely, the Āyārāṅga or the Ācārāṅga-Sūtra—we find that it is the oldest extant canon<sup>2</sup> in prose and in verse, and treats of the mode of life (Ācāra) of the Jaina clergy. It contains two books, or Srutaskandhas, very different from each other in style and in the manner in which the subject is treated. It is the first of these two Srutaskandhas that gives the impression of its being one of the oldest, if not the very oldest, of the existing scriptures. Like the Sūtrakriāṅga and a few other texts of the Siddhānta, in Ācārāṅga also we find that the larger divisions close with the words tī bemi (iti bravīmi) ("Thus I say"), and according to the scholia, Sudharman, Mahāvira's pupil, is regarded as the one who gives utterance to this formula. The prose portions begin with the formula suyam me āusam! tenam bhagavayā evam akḥhāyam ("I have heard, O Long-lived one! Thus has that saint spoken."<sup>3</sup>) In this fashion, which characterises the contents as the oral translation of the utterances of Mahāvira, Jambū, a scholar of Sudharman, is addressed

<sup>1</sup> Charpentier, op. cit., Int., pp. 11-12.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Winternitz, op. cit., p. 296, Belvalkar, op. cit., p. 108; Weber, op. cit., p. 342. "I am of opinion that the first book of the Ācārāṅga-Sūtra and Sūtrakriāṅga-Sūtra may be reckoned among the most ancient parts of the Siddhānta."—Jacobi, op. cit., Int., p. xli.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Weber, op. cit., p. 340, Jacobi, op. cit., pp. 1, 3; Vaidya (P. L.), Suyagadum, pp. 65, 80.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

As seen before, the Ācārāṅga-Sūtra treats mainly of one of the four heads, or Anuyogas, into which the sacred lore is divided—namely, Dharmakathā, Gaṇita (Kāla), Dravya and Caranakarana <sup>1</sup> The sermons therein combine the voice of an indifferent and impartial adviser and the solemn warning of a Guru, spiritual or otherwise To quote a part of the Sūtra itself

“The Arhats and Bhagavatas of the past, present, and future, all say thus speak thus, declare thus, explain thus, all breathing, existing, living, sentient creatures should not be slain, nor treated with violence, nor abused, nor tormented, nor driven away

“This is the pure, unchallengeable, eternal law, which the clever ones, who understand the world, have declared Having adopted (the law), one should not hide it, nor forsake it Correctly understanding the law, one should arrive at indifference, for the impressions of the senses, and ‘not act on the motives of the world’ Those who acquiesce and indulge (in worldly pleasures), are born again and again ‘Day and night exerting thyself, steadfast,’ always having ready wisdom, perceive that the careless (stand) outside (of salvation), if careful, thou wilt always conquer Thus I say ” <sup>2</sup>

The second Anga—the Suyagadāṅga or the Sūtrakṛtāṅga—comprises poetic exhortations and philosophic discussions, followed by a polemic against Kriyāvāda, Akriyāvāda, Vaiṇāyika and Ajñānavāda <sup>3</sup> The object of this Sūtra is to protect young monks from heretic doctrines, to warn them of the perils and temptations involved in them, to confirm them in their creed and to lead them to the highest destination Like the first Anga this is divided into two books, and according to Jacobi and others it is the first that may be reckoned among the most ancient parts of the Siddhānta <sup>4</sup> As in the Buddhist literature, we meet here again a mixture of prose and verse, with some interesting parables scattered here and there For instance we read “As (birds of prey)—e g Dhankas—carry off a fluttering bird whose wings are not yet grown, so many unprincipled men will seduce a novice who has not yet mastered the Law ” <sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> अनुयोग. अचारि द्वाराणि — अखण्डमहालक्ष्मणायामि रक्षितमज्जेहि । गुणसाधन विभक्तो अनुयोगो तो कसो अउहा ॥—Āvāyaka-Sūtra, p. 206

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, op cit, pp 36-37

<sup>3</sup> Cf Vaidya (P L), op cit, pp 3-11

<sup>4</sup> Cf Jacobi, op cit, Int, p xli, Winternitz, op cit, p 297

<sup>5</sup> Cf Jacobi, S B E, xli, p 324

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

The Sūtrakṛtāṅga starts refuting the doctrines of Buddha and of other heretical teachers who are confronted with the main doctrines of Mahāvīra. With all this, as Winternitz has remarked, what we get from this Sūtra about Karman and Samsāra does not differ much from that of "heretic" doctrines. Philosophical ideals such as the following can be found also in the Buddhist text

"It is not myself alone who suffers, all creatures in the world suffer; this a wise man should consider, and he should patiently bear (such calamities) as befall him, without giving way to his passions"<sup>1</sup>

The difficulties and temptations that lie in the way of a monk are very minutely considered, and everywhere the young monk is advised to meet them all heroically. He is specially urged to beware of the temptations of women. Very often we find that such warnings are accompanied by a touch of genuine humour which makes the whole atmosphere more homely and realistic. For instance we read "When they (women) have captured him, they send him on all sorts of errands. Look (for the bodhi) to carve the bottle-gourd, fetch some nice fruit. Bring wood to cook the vegetables, paint my feet, come and meanwhile rub my back . . . ! Give me the collyrium-box, my ornaments, the lute, . . . Fetch me the pincers, the comb, the ribbon to bind up the hair, reach me the looking-glass, put the tooth-brush near me!"<sup>2</sup>

The next two Angas—namely, the Sthānāṅga and the Samavāyāṅga—we shall take together. Like the Buddhist Anguttara-nikāya, both these texts of the Āgamic literature of the Jainas treat of several topics of religious importance in a numerical order, rising in the Sthānāṅga from 1 to 10 and in the Samavāya from 1 to 100, and even up to 1,000,000<sup>3</sup>. As to the contents of the two, the former provides us with a Table of Contents of the lost Dutthivāya, the twelfth Anga of the Jainas, and with an enumeration of the names of the seven schisms, together with those of their founders and of their localities.<sup>4</sup> The latter, or the Samavāya, contains some exact statements about the contents of all the twelve Angas, and also consists of many statements and references about the doctrines, and the legendary hagiology and history of the Jainas<sup>5</sup>. Thus both

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Jacobi, S.B.E., xlv., p. 251

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., pp. 276, 277

<sup>3</sup> Winternitz, op. cit., p. 300, Belvalkar, op. and loc. cit.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Winternitz, op. and loc. cit., Weber, I.A., xviii, p. 370

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Winternitz, op. and loc. cit., Weber, op. cit., p. 377. "To the detailed consideration of the 12 Angas there is appended here, as in the Nandī, a passage on the entire

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the Angas combined together constitute a perfect treasure-house for the correct understanding of innumerable groups of conceptions and of the Siddhānta

Coming to the Bhagavatī, the fifth Anga of the Jainas, we find that it is one of the most important and most sacred texts of the Jaina Siddhānta. Its importance, from the standpoint of Jaina history, is second to none. In our previous chapters about the period of Pārśva and Mahāvīra, and about their contemporaries, we have referred to it more than once. Besides this the work contains a circumstantial and complicated exposition of the Jaina dogma, partly in the form of catechism and partly in the form of legendary dialogues (utthāśasamvāda). Of the legends, especially important are those which treat of the predecessors and contemporaries of Mahāvīra, of the disciples of Pārśva, and of the founders of sects—Jamālī and Gośāla Makkhaliputta—to whom is dedicated the fifteenth book of the Bhagavatī<sup>1</sup> “All these legends,” observes Weber, “give us the impression of containing traditions which have been handed down in good faith. They offer, therefore, in all probability (especially as they frequently agree with the Buddhist legends) most important evidence for the period of the life of Mahāvīra himself.”<sup>2</sup>

The Nāyādharmakathā, or the sixth Anga of the Siddhānta, brings us to the narrative literature of the Jainas. It is a collection of tales or parables designed to serve as moral examples, and, as with almost all the narrative literature of India, the Kathā literature of the Jainas also serves didactic purposes. At the beginning of his homily a Jaina preacher usually gives, in a few prose words or verses, the topic of his sermon (Dharmadeśanā), and then goes on to tell an interesting tale of considerable extent, as the most effective means of spreading the doctrines of Mahāvīra among his followers.

According to Hertel the literary form of these Jaina sermons not only resembles that of the Buddhist Jātaka, but is also highly

Duvalasangam Ganapadagam. This deals partly with the attacks which it was subjected to in the past, which it now experiences in the present and will experience in the future, partly with the devoted acquiescence which is its lot to meet with in these three periods, and concludes with the declaration of its certain existence for ever—na kayā na dāi, na kayā na 'tthi, na kayā na bhavissati”—Ibid. To this Weber makes the following note:

According to Abhayadevasūri attacks at the hands of Jamālī, Goṣṭhāmāhila, etc.—i.e. the representatives of the seven schisms”—Ibid, n. 65.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Winternitz, op. cit., pp. 300-301. “Of the legends which are adduced here, those claim a special interest which deal with predecessors or contemporaries of Mahāvīra, with the opinion of his heterodox opponents and with their conversion”—Weber, I.A., xix, p. 64.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p. 65.

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

superior to it.<sup>1</sup> "Characteristic of Indian art," observes the great Orientalist, "are the narratives of the Jainas. The Jainas' way of telling their tales differs from that of the Bauddhas in some very essential points. Their main story is not that of the past but that of the present, they do not teach their doctrines directly, but indirectly; and there is no future Jina to be provided with a rôle in their stories"<sup>2</sup>

Most of these narratives of the Jainas are in the form of parables. Generally more stress is put on the parables than on the narration itself. In the first book of the Anga under our discussion there is one of this kind, which runs as follows. A merchant has four daughters-in-law. To test them he gives each one five grains of rice, with the instruction that they should keep them carefully until he would ask them back. In the meantime it so happens that one throws the grains away, thinking, "In the godown there are plenty of grains, I shall give him some others." The second one thinks the same and eats them up. The third one keeps them carefully in her jewel-box; but the fourth one sows them, and reaps a harvest again and again, until she has a great stock of rice after five years. When the merchant inquires for the five grains of rice he condemns the first two daughters-in-law by entrusting them to do only the lowest kind of work in the house, while the third is asked to look after the whole property, and the fourth one is made the head mistress of the house. Based on this simple story the moral to be taught is that with these four women may be compared monks, of whom some are not at all anxious to keep the five great vows, a few others who neglect them; the better ones, who keep the vows scrupulously; and the best ones, who are not only content to keep them, but also look for followers.<sup>3</sup>

Mostly of narrative contents are also the seventh, eighth and ninth Angas. Of these the first—namely, the Uvāsaga-Dasāo—contains legends about ten pious Śrāvakas, many of whom are rich merchants, and who, by means of asceticism, in the end come so far that even as lay-followers they are rewarded with miraculous powers. Finally they die as real Jaina saints, by starving themselves voluntarily to death, and are then reborn as gods in the heaven of the pious.<sup>4</sup> The most interesting is the story of the rich potter, Saddalaputta, "the servant of the Ājīviya," who was finally

<sup>1</sup> Hertel, op cit, p. 7

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 8.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Jñātā, sūt. 83, pp. 115-120

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Hoernle, Uvāsaga-Dasāo, i, pp. 1-44, etc

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

convinced by Mahāvīra of the truth of his doctrine<sup>1</sup> Likewise the eighth and ninth Angas deal with legends concerning the pious, who, having put an end to their worldly life, attained the Moksha and the highest heavenly world respectively<sup>2</sup>

Taking the last two of the extant Angas, known as the Praśna-vyākarnāni and the Vipākasrutam, we find that the first is more of a dogmatic than of a legendary nature, while the other is the reverse of it. It treats of the ten moral duties—commandments and prohibitions—viz first of the five Adharmas, which must be avoided—injury to life, lying, robbery, unchastity, (love of) possession—and then of the five Dharmas, the opposites of each of the above sins<sup>3</sup> The Vipāka-Sūtra, on the other hand, contains legends on the reward of good and evil deeds, which are rightly, in the opinion of Dr Winternitz, similar to the Buddhistic Karman stories in the Avadānasataka and the Karmasataka<sup>4</sup>

As to the twelfth Anga of the Jainas, it is no longer extant. It is irrevocably lost, along with the fourteen Pūrvas—the oldest portion of the canon—which were incorporated in it when they ceased to exist independently of the Anga literature<sup>5</sup> However there is one question of capital interest connected with the loss of the Drshṭwāda. Eminent Jaina scholars in Europe feel that the Jainas themselves give no convincing reason for the loss of what may be regarded as the oldest and the most venerable part of their sacred lore, and hence various explanations of what according to them seems to have been a startling fact have been attempted by them. To mention a few of these scholars. Weber thinks that the Drshṭwāda, not being in complete agreement with the tenets of the orthodox doctrine, was wilfully rejected by the Jainas themselves<sup>6</sup> According to Jacobi, Drshṭwāda became obsolete because it consisted merely of discussions (Pravāda) between Mahāvīra and his opponents, and that these would have gradually lost their interest and at last become wholly unintelligible to the Jainas themselves<sup>7</sup> Last on the list, Dr Leumann propounds a totally different view as regards the loss of the Drshṭwāda. According to him this Anga

<sup>1</sup> Cf Hoernle, Uvāsaga Dasdo 1, pp 105-140

<sup>2</sup> Cf Barnett, The Anagada-Dasdo and Anuttaravādīya-Dasdo, pp 15-16, 110, etc

<sup>3</sup> Cf Weber, I A, xx, p 23

<sup>4</sup> Cf Winternitz, op cit, p 306

<sup>5</sup> The fourteen Pūrvas were included as the third great subdivision of the twelfth Anga Cf Weber, op cit, p 174

<sup>6</sup> Cf Weber, I A, xvii, p 286

<sup>7</sup> Cf Jacobi, S B.E., xxii, Int, pp xiv ff

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

of 'he Jainas must have contained a great number of texts concerning tantric rites, sorcery, astrology, etc., and this would be the real reason for its becoming obsolete'<sup>1</sup>

All these explanations for the loss of the twelfth Anga of the Jainas seem to have one drawback in common—viz that of suggesting that the Drshṭivāda ("or the Pūrvas, which is much the same thing"<sup>2</sup>) was simply abandoned by the Jainas. This sounds rather strange, and especially so in the face of the traditions of the Jainas themselves, for they clearly tell us that the Pūrvas became obsolete only gradually, so that the loss was not complete until a thousand years after the death of Mahāvīra—i.e. just at the time of the final redaction of the canon. With whatsoever limitations we may take into consideration this tradition of the Jainas, along with Dr Charpentier, in our opinion also "the statement as a whole ought not to be totally disregarded"<sup>3</sup>

Coming to the second part of the Siddhānta, corresponding to the number of the Angas, we get the twelve Upāṅgas. According to Weber and others "there are no instances of real inner connection between the Angas and Upāṅgas having the same position in the series"<sup>4</sup> Taking Aupapātika, the first Upāṅga, as mentioned before, its historical importance rests in connection with the detailed treatment of the appearance and sermon of Mahāvīra in Campā under King Kūṇiya or Ajātaśatru, and of the pilgrimage of the king to Mahāvīra

As to the second Upāṅga, the Rājaprasāniya, the largest portion of the text deals with the pilgrimage of the god Suriabha, with a numerous retinue, to Amalakappa, the city of King Sveta, in order to offer his reverence to Mahāvīra, especially by means of music, singing and dancing<sup>5</sup> However, the quintessence of the work is in the inserted dialogue between King Paesi and the monk Kesi, which starts with the question in reference to the relation of the Jīva (soul) to the Deha (body), and which ends with the conversion of the open-minded king<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "des Ditthivāya eine ganz analoge tantra-artige Texpartie gestanden hat, sondern lässt damit zugleich auch errathen, warum der Ditthivāya verloren gegangen ist"—Leumann, "Beziehungen der Jaina-Literatur zu Andern Literaturkreisen Indiens," Actes du Congress à Leide, 1888, p. 559

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op. cit., Int., pp. 22-23. "Tradition indeed appears to regard the Pūrvas as identical with the Drshṭivāda"—Weber, I A, xx, p. 170

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Charpentier, op. cit., Int., p. 28

<sup>4</sup> Weber, op. cit., p. 366. Cf. Winternitz, op. and loc. cit.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Rājaprasāniya-Sūtra (Āgamodaya Samiti), sūti 1 ff

<sup>6</sup> Cf. ibid., sūti 65-79

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

Of the remaining Upāṅgas the third and fourth may be taken together, being more or less similar in contents and form. The first of these treats in a dialogue form of the different forms and groups of animated nature, while the second treats of the different forms, conditions of life, etc., of the Jīva<sup>1</sup>. However, Prajñāpanā, the fourth Upāṅga, differs from nearly all the other canonical texts in this, that it is attributed to an author called Ayya Sāma (Ārya Syāma, also Syāmārya), who is placed by both the Kharatara and Tapa Gaccha Pattāvahs in the fourth century after Vira<sup>2</sup>.

The next group combines in it the fifth, sixth and seventh Upāṅgas of the Jainas. The Sūryaprajñapti, the Jambudvīpa-prajñapti and the Candraprajñapti are the scientific works of the Jainas, and they treat of astronomy, legendary geography of Bhāratavarsha, and of cosmography of the heavens and system of time-reckoning, respectively. Of these, Sūryaprajñapti, the fifth Upāṅga, needs special mention on our part. "In it," observes Dr Weber, "we find the most remarkable statements concerning the astronomy of the Jainas arranged in a systematic form of presentation. It is an open question whether Greek influence made itself felt in this rectification, at any rate we have to deal here with an indigenous style of Indian astronomy antecedent to the authoritative and prepondering influence of the Hellenes"<sup>3</sup>. This fact of the Sūryaprajñapti being a unique specimen of "an indigenous style of Indian astronomy," even prior to the days of Greek influence in the East, is believed in by other scholars also,<sup>4</sup> and its importance in the light of Jaina history is self-evident.

With regard to the last five Upāṅgas they are also compiled as five sections of a single text, entitled the Niryāvahsūtiam. According to Weber, "their enumeration as five separate texts was caused by the desire to have the number of Upāṅgas correspond to that of the Angas"<sup>5</sup>. The historical importance of the eighth Upāṅga lies in this, that it treats of how the ten half-brothers of

<sup>1</sup> Cf Weber, op cit, pp 371, 373

<sup>2</sup> Cf Klatt, IA, xi, pp 247, 251. According to Dr Charpentier, "Upāṅga 4 is expressly stated to be the work of Ārya Syāma a patriarch who is certainly identical with that Kālakācārya whom the tradition places in the time of Gardabhila, the father of Vikramāditya"—Charpentier, op cit, p 27. Cf Jacobi, Z DMG, xxiv, pp 251 ff

<sup>3</sup> Weber, IA, xxi, pp 14-15

<sup>4</sup> Cf Jacobi, SBE, xxi, Int, p vi, Leumann, op cit, pp 552-553. Thibaut, JASB, xlix, 1880, p 108. For some facts of especial interest in connection with the Sūryaprajñapti see ibid, pp 107-121, 181-206

<sup>5</sup> Weber, op cit, p 23

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

Kūnika were killed in the campaign against Cedaga, the great Licchavi king, and how as a result they were reborn in different hells.<sup>1</sup>

This much about the Upāṅgas which form the second group of the Siddhānta. With regard to the third group of the texts of the Siddhānta it is formed by ten Painnas or Prakīrṇas. These texts, "in the pregnant sense of the word, bear a name which, denoting 'scattered,' 'hastily sketched' pieces, well suits their real nature as a group of texts corresponding to the Vedic Parīśiṣṭas. Like the Parīśiṣṭas they are, with a few exceptions, composed in metre; and in fact in Āryā, the metre which is usual in the Kārikā insertions in the Angas," etc.<sup>2</sup> These Painnas treat of manifold subjects. Among them may be mentioned the prayers by means of which one is put under the fourfold protection of the Arhats, Siddhas, Sādhus and the Religion, the genuine euthanasy; the life in embryo, the qualities of teachers and pupils, the enumeration of gods, etc.<sup>3</sup>

Next we shall take the Chedasūtras, the fourth part of the Siddhānta. They discuss in general what constitutes prohibited conduct for monks and nuns, prescribing punishments or expiations for the same, though there is a large admixture of subsidiary matter of a legendary character. They correspond, consequently, to the Vinaya of the Buddhists, with which, despite all differences, they are closely connected in contents and in style of treatment.<sup>4</sup> As to the antiquity of the existing Chedasūtras, in the opinion of both Winternitz and Weber a large portion of them is of considerable antiquity. This is because the quintessence of this group, the Chedasūtras 3-5, belong to the oldest part of the canon.<sup>5</sup>

These three texts—namely, the third, fourth and fifth Chedasūtras—come under one group, known as Dasa-Kappa-Vavahāra.<sup>6</sup> Of these the composition of the two texts, the Kalpa and the Vyavahāra, is frequently referred back to Bhadrabāhu, who is said to have extracted them out of the ninth Pūrva.<sup>7</sup> The authorship of Bhadrabāhu is also asserted by tradition of the third member of this group of

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Niryāvalika Sūtra, pp. 3-19.

<sup>2</sup> Weber, op. cit., p. 106. Cf. Winternitz, op. cit., p. 308.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Weber, op. cit., pp. 109-112, Winternitz, op. cit. and loc. cit.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Weber, op. cit., p. 179, Winternitz, op. cit., p. 309.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. ibid., p. 308, Weber, op. cit., pp. 179-180.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Winternitz, op. cit., p. 309, Weber, op. cit., pp. 179, 210.

<sup>7</sup> दशकप्पववहारो, निम्नोक्ता जेय जयगुप्तायोः । संदामि भद्रबाहुः, —Rakṣmanḍalastotra, v. 106.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

texts, the Āyāradasāo. The eighth section of this last-mentioned text is long known as the Kalpa-Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu. It is formed of the entire work called Kalpa-Sūtra—i.e. of the entire work of this name in its three parts, however Jacobi and others rightly hold that in reality only the last (the third) section, which is called "Sāmācāri"—i.e. rules for Yatis—"Comprised by the name Paryushanā Kalpa," belongs to this place, and that it alone could claim, together with the remaining Āyāradasāo, to be ascribed to Bhadrabāhu.<sup>1</sup>

As to the contents of the Kalpa-Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu we need not enter into any more details here. We have referred to it more than once in connection with the life-history of Mahāvīra, with that of his twenty-three predecessors, with the successors of Mahāvīra, the pontiffs of the Jaina church, and in connection with the rules and prescriptions to be observed by Yatis. With these few remarks about the Chedasūtras we shall next deal briefly with the Mūlasūtras and the two solitary texts which form the last two groups of the Jaina canon.

Taking first the Mūlasūtras, we find that the significance of this title of a group of the Jaina canon is rather doubtful. In ordinary parlance, however, it would mean original text, but it is likely, according to Dr Charpentier, that, like the Buddhists, the Jainas also may have used Mūla in the sense of "original text," and that too merely to denote the actual words of Mahāvīra himself.<sup>2</sup> As to the contents of these Sūtras the first three also, from a literary standpoint, are of great importance. Of these the Uttarādhyayana, the first in the list, with its specimens of old ascetic poetry, belongs to the most precious part of the canon. It consists of direct ordinances in reference to a correct course of life, especially of the clergy, and of recitals and parables illustrating this life. According to the opinion of the old authorities summarised by Jacobi the aim of the text is "to instruct a young monk in his principal duties, to commend an ascetic life by precepts and examples, to warn him against the dangers in his spiritual career, and to give some theoretical information."<sup>3</sup>

Much of the contents, according to modern authorities on Jaina literature, makes upon us the impression of great antiquity,

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, pp 22-23, Winternitz, op and loc cit, Weber, op cit, p 211

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int, p 82

<sup>3</sup> Jacobi, ś B.E., xiv, Int, p xxxiv

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

and recalls similar Buddhistic texts, and especially Anga 2—that is to say, the very oldest parts of the canon<sup>1</sup> As just remarked, it resembles the Sūtrakṛtāṅga with regard to its object and parts of the subjects treated, however in the Uttarādhyayana “the heretical doctrines are only occasionally alluded to, not fully discussed. Apparently the dangers expected from that quarter grew less in the same measure as time advanced and the institutions of the sect were more firmly established. Of more interest to a young monk seems to have been an accurate knowledge of animate and inanimate things, as a rather long treatise on this subject has been added at the end of the book”<sup>2</sup>

As to the contents of the second Mūlasūtra, the Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, it deals with all the six Āvaśyakas, or observances which are obligatory upon the Jaina, be he a layman or one of the clergy<sup>3</sup> With these observances are connected narrations of historical or quasi-historical importance which are handed down to us in the commentaries. To quote Professor Weber “It treats not merely of the doctrine of Mahāvīra on this point, but also of the history of the doctrine itself—i.e. of the predecessors of Mahāvīra, of himself, of his eleven *Ganadhara*s and of his opponents. the different schisms (ninhagas, ninhavas) which gradually gained a foothold in his teachings. The latter are chronologically fixed. Haribhadra quotes very detailed legends (Kathānakas) in Prākṛt prose (sometimes in metre) in this connection, and also in connection with Dīṭṭhamita and Udāharana, which are frequently mentioned in the text”<sup>4</sup>

Taking next the last two Mūlasūtras we find that the contents of the first one—namely, the Dasaveyāliya—refer to the Vinaya, or rules of conduct of the Jaina clergy, and this according to Dr Winternitz reminds us of the Dhammapada of the Buddhists<sup>5</sup> The authorship of this complete conspectus of the leading Jaina tenets is ascribed to Sayyambhava or Sajjambhava, the fourth patriarch

<sup>1</sup> Cf Charpentier, op cit, Int., p. 34, Winternitz, op cit, p. 312, Weber, op cit, p. 810

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, op and loc cit

<sup>3</sup> सम्यगेण सावकस्य यः अवस्यकायश्चर्यं हवति नमः। अतोऽहोविमलस्य यः तमः। सावस्यस्य नाम—Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, p. 58, the six Āvaśyakas in order are as follows—The Sāmāyam, or avoidance of evil deeds, the Caurisatho, or praise of twenty-four Jinas, the Vandanayam, or veneration of the teachers, the Paṭṭikamanam, or confession, the Kāusagga, or atonement of sins committed by penance and meditation, and the Paccakkhānam, or abstention from food, etc. Cf ibid

<sup>4</sup> Weber, op cit, p. 890

<sup>5</sup> Cf Winternitz, op cit, p. 815

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

after Mahāvira. Mrs Stevenson looks upon this Sūtra "as a monument of a father's love persisting even in the ascetic life,"<sup>1</sup> because it was composed by the author for the benefit of his son named Manaka.<sup>2</sup> As to the last Mūlasūtra, it is a mere supplement to the previous one.

Finally, what remains to be seen of the Siddhānta of the Jainas are the two solitary texts known as Nandīsūtra and the Anuyogadvārsūtra. Both of them are somewhat related in contents, but they differ in style. They are more or less encyclopædic, but systematic, reviews of everything that appeared necessary as a means of information with reference to the sources and forms of a correct knowledge and understanding of the sacred texts.<sup>3</sup> In this way, according to Weber, their author could present his readers with a hermeneutical introduction. To quote the learned scholar, "these two works are admirably adapted to the use of one who, having completed a collection or redaction of them, then seeks for knowledge concerning the nature of sacred knowledge itself"<sup>4</sup> Though according to the literary traditions of the Jainas Devardhigaṇi seems to be the author of these two solitary texts, to both Weber and Charpentier there seems, however, no external support for this conclusion, which is not borne out by any information to be derived from the contents.<sup>5</sup> "After all," observes the latter, "I think that the authorship of Devarddhi is not very strongly established, and we may regard him as a redactor rather than the author of the canonical works"<sup>6</sup>

This much about the canonical literature of the Svetāmbara Jainas.<sup>7</sup> As to the language of the canon, from the unsettled state of the Jaina literature down to Devardhigaṇi's times it may be concluded that the language also in which it was handed down underwent a gradual alteration. However this much seems highly probable, that the religious reformers of the sixth century before Christ, who taught in opposition to the priestly wisdom of the Brahman scholars a way to salvation accessible to the bulk of the

<sup>1</sup> Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 70

<sup>2</sup> Cf Jacobi, Kalpa-Sūtra, p 118, Klatt, op cit, pp 246, 251 For the tradition about the composition of the Dakṣaśikāhika see Hemacandra, Parīśiṣṭaparvan, Canto V.

<sup>3</sup> Cf Weber, op cit, pp 298-294, Winternitz, op and loc cit.

<sup>4</sup> Weber, op cit, p 294

<sup>5</sup> Cf ibid., Charpentier, op cit, Int., p 18.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid.

<sup>7</sup> About the Siddhānta of the Digambaras see Winternitz, op cit, p. 816; Jacobi, op cit, Int., p. 80.

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

people, used for their sermons the language of the ordinary people and not the learned language of Sanskrit. This language of the people seems to have been the vernacular dialect of Magadha, the home of Mahāvira. With all this the Māgadhi used by the Jainas "has very little of affinity with the Māgadhi either of Aśoka's inscriptions or of the Prākṛt grammarians" <sup>1</sup> This is why the actual language used by the Jainas is known as Ardha-Māgadhi, a mixed language, "which consists to a great extent of Māgadhi, but took up also elements of foreign dialects, Mahāvira is said to have spoken this mixed language to be understood by all with whom he came in touch, therefore also by the people living on the boundaries of his mother-country" <sup>2</sup>

According to the tradition of the Jainas "the old Sūtra was exclusively composed in the language called Ardha Māgadhi," <sup>3</sup> but the Jaina Prākṛt of "the old Sūtra" differs considerably from the language of the commentaries and poets. The Jainas call it Ārsham, the language of the Rshis, while the dialect in which the canon is written is nearer to Māhārāshtrī, and is known as the Jaina Māhārāshtrī. We shall not enter into any further details about the peculiarities of the language used and developed by the Jainas before the final rearrangement of the Jaina books. Suffice it to say that "the Jaina Māhārāshtrī, being once fixed as a sacred language, continued to be the literary language of the Jainas until it was replaced by Sanskrit" <sup>4</sup>

Of the non-canonical literature of the Jainas we have, on the one hand, any amount of commentatorial works represented by the class of scriptures called the Niryutis or Niryuktis, and on the other, independent works consisting partly of learned works about dogmatics, ethics, and monks' discipline, and partly poetical products, of which some are hymns to glorify the Jainas while the rest belong to the highly increased narrative literature of the Jainas. It seems certain that long before the final compilation of the canon under Devardhi the Jaina monks must have begun composing explanations to the holy texts, for the oldest commentaries, the Niryutis or Niryuktis, are in some cases very closely connected with the Sūtras, or have even displaced them. Pinḍa and Oghanyjyuti appear in

<sup>1</sup> Jacobi, op. cit., Int., p. 17

<sup>2</sup> Glasenapp, Der Jainismus, p. 84

<sup>3</sup> पोरकण्डवनाहभालानिययं हवइ सुचं — Hemacandra, Prākṛt Grammar, iv. 287

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, op. cit., Int., p. 20. For further details about the language of the sacred writings of the Jainas see ibid., pp. 17 ff. Glasenapp, op. cit., pp. 81 ff.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

the canon itself, and Oghanyjuttu is said to have been taken from some of the Pūrvas.<sup>1</sup>

According to Dr Charpentier, old as the Niryuktis are they certainly do not represent the very first set of Jaina commentatorial literature. They are not the oldest but the oldest existing set of commentaries on the canonical scriptures of the Jainas. This is because "the Niryukti is in its main parts only a sort of index, a collection of versus memoriales meant to give an abbreviation of an extensive commentary, where all these tales and legends were really told at length."<sup>2</sup> The oldest commentator seems to be Bhadrabāhu, who, as seen before, died one hundred and seventy years after the Nirvāṇa of Vardhamāna. He is said to have composed ten Niryuktis on different works belonging to the canon—viz the Ācārāṅga, the Sūtrakṛtāṅga, the Sūryaprajñāpati, the Daśaśrutaskandha, Kalpa and Vyavahāra, the Āvaśyaka, the Daśavaikālika, the Uttarādhyayana and the Rshabhāshita.<sup>3</sup> According to Banarsi Das Jain, Bhadrabāhu's Niryukti on the Āvaśyaka is the earliest authority on the Pūrvabhavas—i.e. former births of Rshabha. This is because "the Angas do not make any special mention of the Pūrvabhavas of the Tirthankaras, though they contain numerous references to the past and future lives of several of Mahāvīra's contemporaries."<sup>4</sup>

What makes all these commentaries so precious is the circumstance that they have preserved for us, on the one hand, very many old historic or quasi-historic traditions, and on the other, a vast amount of material for popular narrations. Like the Buddhist monks the Jaina monks also have at all times preferred to animate their sermons by narrating stories and legends of saints with a view to gaining and preserving as many followers as possible, by taking advantage of the Indian lust of hearing religious stories. Thus "there gradually accumulated a considerable stock of legends and tales, partly borrowed from collections among the people since time immemorial, part'y belonging to the 'legend aurea' of the Jainas themselves, and partly perhaps invented quite recently, which then formed a sort of permanent commentary on the holy texts."<sup>5</sup>

To this famous Bhadrabāhu is also attributed the Samhitā

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Winternitz, op cit, p. 817.

<sup>2</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int., pp. 50-51.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Āvaśyaka-Sūtra, vv. 84-86, p. 61, Jacobi, op cit, Int., p. 12.

<sup>4</sup> Jain, Jaina Jātakas, Int., p. iii.

<sup>5</sup> Charpentier, op cit, Int., p. 51.

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

known as the Bhādrabāhavi-Samhitā—an astronomical work—and the Uvasaggaharastotra, an ode to Pārśva. However it is doubtful whether the Bhadrabāhu of the Samhitā and of the Niryuktis mentioned above are one and the same person. Besides its being of the same character as the other Samhitās, this Bhādrabāhavi-Samhitā is not cited by Varāhamihira, who names amongst his numerous authorities another Jaina astronomer, Siddhasena,<sup>1</sup> and consequently it is more modern than Varāhamihira. To quote Jacobi, "At any rate, its author cannot be the same Bhadrabāhu who composed the Kalpa-Sūtra, because its last redaction, the date of which (980 A V = A D 454 or A D 514) is mentioned in it, was already earlier than, at least contemporaneous with, Varāhamihira—not to speak of its composition."<sup>2</sup>

As for the Uvasaggaharastotra, the tradition about its composition by Bhadrabāhu is based on the following verse

उवसग्गहर् पुं काली जेय संयकजाणी ।
करुणापरेण विहिंसं न भवद्वाहू गुरु जयत ॥<sup>3</sup>

"Victory to Guru Bhadrabāhu, who by composing the Uvasaggaharastotra bestowed, out of pity, happiness on the Samgha."

With regard to the contents of the Stotra it is a hymn in veneration of Lord Pārśva. This is clear from the last verse of the Stotra, which runs as follows: "Thus praised Glorious one ' with a heart full of mighty devotion, Pārśva ' mayest thou, O God ' therefore, give perfect wisdom in every birth, Moon of the Jinās."<sup>4</sup> As to its composition by Bhadrabāhu, Jacobi believes that if that is granted, it is the oldest specimen of the now extensive literature of Jaina hymns.<sup>5</sup>

Besides Bhadrabāhu's there are many other independent works, but we shall limit ourselves to a few of the most important of them. Of these the first to draw our attention is the Upadeśamālā of Dharmadāsaganī, who is claimed by the Jainas to be a contemporary of Mahāvīra.<sup>6</sup> The text contains moral instructions for laymen as well as for monks, and its popularity is witnessed by

<sup>1</sup> Kern, Bṛhat Samhitā, Pre., p. 20.

<sup>2</sup> Jacobi, op cit, Int., p. 14. For the tradition of the Digambaras about Bhadrabāhu II and the legendary story of the Śvetāmbaras about Bhadrabāhu and Varāhamihira see ibid, pp. 13, 30. Vidyabhusana, Medieval School of Indian Logic, pp. 5-6.

<sup>3</sup> Kalpa-Sūtra, Subhāṣitā-Tīkā, p. 102.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Jacobi, op cit, Int., p. 13.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. ibid, p. 12.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Dharmadāsaganī, Upadeśamālā (Jaina Dharma Prasāraṇa Saṁhā), p. 2.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

many commentaries, two of which go as far back as the ninth century A.D.<sup>1</sup> After Dharmadāsa we may mention Umāsvāti, who is claimed by both the Śvetāmbaras and the Digambaras. According to Winternitz, because he represents views which do not correspond with those of the Digambaras, they are scarcely entitled to claim him as one of them. With what limitations this fact about Umāsvāti can be or should be understood we cannot say. However, the learned scholar is right in inferring, with others of his opinion, that probably the great Ācārya belongs to an earlier period, when both the sects were not so sharply divided.<sup>2</sup> This is further supported by the Tapagaccha Paṭṭavali of the Jainas, according to which Śyāmārya, of the fourth century after Vira and, as mentioned before, the author of the Prajñāpanā, was the pupil of Umāsvāti.<sup>3</sup> Nevertheless, according to Hiralal, "the solution may, however, lie in the fact that Umāsvāti does not touch the principles under controversy between the two sections."<sup>4</sup>

This Umāsvāti is better known as Vācaka-Śramana. According to the Śvetāmbara recension of his Tattvārthādīgama-Sūtra it seems he was known also as Nagaravācaka. We are told by him that he was born in Nyagrodhika, but he resided in Kusumapura or Pātaliputra.<sup>5</sup> The Hindu philosopher, Madhavācārya, calls him Umāsvātivācākācārya.<sup>6</sup> As to the writings of this great Ācārya, we find that no less than five hundred works are said to have been composed by him, of which, however, only five have survived. The colophon to all of these—viz (i) Tattvārthādīgama-Sūtra, (ii) Bhashya on the above; (iii) Pūjāprakaraṇa; (iv) Jambūdvīpa-samāsa; and (v) Prasamartī, as published by the Asiatic Society of Bengal—reads "कृतिः सिताम्बराचार्यस्य महाकवेर्नास्तितिराचकस्य इति ।"<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf Winternitz, op cit, p 348, Macdonell, India's Past, p 74, Stevenson (Mrs), op cit, p 82

<sup>2</sup> Cf Winternitz, op cit, p 351, Hiralal (Rai Bahadur), Catalogue of MSS in C P and Berar, Int, pp vii-ix, Vidyabhusana, op cit, p 9

<sup>3</sup> Cf Klatt, op cit, p 251. This account of the Śvetāmbara Paṭṭavali assigns him to centuries before Christ. Ārya Mahāgiri, the tenth pontiff after Mahāvīra, dies two hundred and forty-nine years after the latter. He had two pupils, Bahula and Balissaha. The pupil of the latter was Umāsvāti. Cf ibid, pp 246, 251. In the Digambara account Umāsvāti is mentioned as the sixth in succession from Bhadrabāhu, and as succeeding Kundakundacārya. His date of death is given v s 142 or A D 85. Cf Hoernle, IA, xx, p 341. For further information about Umāsvāti see Hiralal (Rai Bahadur), op cit, Int, pp vii-ix, Peterson, Report on San MSS, iv, Int, p xvi, Jaini, S.B.J., ii, Int, pp vii-ix

<sup>4</sup> Hiralal (Rai Bahadur), op cit, Int, p ix

<sup>5</sup> Tattvārthādīgama-Sūtra (ed Motilal Ladhaji), Adhyāyana X, p 208

<sup>6</sup> Cf Cowell and Gough, Sarva-Darśana-Samgraha, p 55

<sup>7</sup> Hiralal, op cit, Int, p viii

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

Among the works mentioned above, Tattvārthādhigama-Sūtra is the one on which mostly rests his fame. Of the few priceless jewels that have been rescued from loss and oblivion this is about the most valuable. Umāsvāti is the first to put in the popular style of the philosophical Sanskrit Sūtras all the Jainistic principles that constitute the backbone of the Āgamic literature of the Jains. This is why it is virtually known as the Jaina Bible and is revered by all sections of the Jaina community. How great and authoritative it is recognised to be will be further evident from the fact that it has perhaps received the greatest attention from most Jaina commentators. No less than thirty-one commentaries are known to be extant now. There is no Jaina doctrine or dogma which is not expressed or implied in these aphorisms. Verily Tattvārthasūtra is a sacred epitome of Jainism.<sup>1</sup>

With these few introductory notes on the great Umāsvāti-vācaka we shall pass on to the period of Vikramāditya, with Siddhasena Divākara and Pādalīptācārya as the outstanding luminaries of the Jaina literary history.<sup>2</sup> With regard to the authenticity of the ancient and persistent Jaina tradition about the period of Siddhasena and his conversion of Vikrama we have already dealt, and hence we need not here enter into any further details about this moot question of the period of Divākara. However two facts may be adduced here in favour of this traditional date of Siddhasena. In the first place, like Vācaka-Sramana, he also is claimed by both the Digambaras and the Svetāmbaras, and secondly, references to him in the literature of both the sects are ancient.<sup>3</sup>

As to the literature left to us by the great Siddhasena, he is said to have written thirty-two independent works dealing with Jaina logic and philosophy. Leaving aside the minor question of the number of works composed by him he is precisely the first Svetāmbara author of Prakaranas in the technical meaning of the word. "A Prakaranana is a systematic treatise in which the subject is exposed in a scientific form, unlike the unsystematic, either diffuse or episodical, treatment of subjects in canonical books, it may be in Prākṛt, but as a rule it is in Sanskrit."<sup>4</sup> Such endeavours on the part of great teachers like Siddhasena and others

<sup>1</sup> Jaini, op cit, Int., p. viii

<sup>2</sup> Rice (E. P.), Kanarese Literature, p. 41

<sup>3</sup> Hirai (Rai Bahadur), op cit, Int., p. xiii

<sup>4</sup> Jacobi, Samardhica Kāhā, Int., p. xii.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

during the first few centuries before and after the Christian era to raise the Svētāmbaras to the high level of Indian mental culture were brought to their conclusion by Hemacandra, who provided them with admirable text-books of the principal Indian sciences, besides such standard works as more directly concerned their own creed

Siddhasena is known to us particularly as the famous author of Nyāyāvatāra and Sammatatarka. The first is a metrical work on logic, giving an exposition of the doctrine of Pramāṇa (sources of valid knowledge) and Naya (the method of comprehending things from particular standpoints), while the second is the only work in Prākṛt on general philosophy containing an elaborate discussion on the principles of logic. Before the inauguration of these two learned works it seems there had not perhaps existed any distinct treatise on Jaina logic, its principles having been included in the works on metaphysics and religion. To quote Dr Vidyabhusana: "Logic was mixed up with metaphysics and religion in the ancient writing of the Jainas as in those of other sects in India. The first Jaina writer on pure logic appears to have been Siddhasena Divākara. It was he who, for the first time among the Jainas, distinguished logic from the cognate branches of learning by composing a metrical work called Nyāyāvatāra on Logic in thirty-two stanzas."<sup>1</sup>

As with Bhadrabāhu so also with Divākara is connected one of the hymns of the Jainas which is also an ode to Pārśva. This is the Kalyāṇamandirastotra, the tradition about whose composition runs as follows:

"Once he (Siddhasena) presumptuously declared in the presence of his Guru that he would turn the whole sacred lore from Prākṛt into Sanskrit. For the expiation of the sin committed by this sacrilegious utterance he was administered by his Guru the Pārāṇhika Prāyaścitta, which required him to remain dumb for twelve years and visit sacred places. In the observance of this vow he once went to Ujjain and lodged in the temple of Mahākālā. Here he incurred the displeasure of the priests for not making obeisance to the god Śiva. They called the King Vikramāditya, who compelled Siddhasena to bow before the god. Siddhasena did this, reciting the Kalyāṇamandira ode, which had the effect of splitting the image of Śiva in twain and manifesting out of it an image of a Jaina Tirthankara Being impressed with his power King Vikramāditya and many others became converted to Jainism " <sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Vidyabhusana, Nyāyāvatāra Int., p. 1

JAINA LITERATURE OF THE NORTH

With regard to Pādaliṭṭa we have already referred to him as one who had converted his majesty King Marunda, "the emperor of the thirty-six hundred thousand people of Kanyākubja" <sup>2</sup> He is known to us as the author of the Tarangavatī, the most ancient and famous of Jaina romances The original text has been lost, but a later recasting of it, Tarangalolā, has been preserved Nemicandra, the author of the summary, abridged Tarangavatī by the omission of complex verses and "Lokapadas" (popular sayings) The reason given by Nemicandra for abridging the original is that it was very extensive, complex, and full of pairs, sixes, and Kulakas (collections) of verses, and that consequently it had become a work only for the learned, the ordinary people having lost interest in it <sup>3</sup>

However, in spite of its being an abridged edition of Tarangavatī, Tarangalolā is also of great literary interest as a specimen, and reflex, as it were, of the more popular literature of fiction current in those days, which must have been a very extensive one, both in Sanskrit and Prākṛt, though very few works belonging to it have come down to us As usual with other specimens of such literature, in our romance also the picture of the heroine ends in her renouncement of the world and entering the order Karma remembrance of a previous birth, and its consequences, etc., serve to motivate the story, and the narrative is interspersed with a great deal of religious instruction, which, however, rarely degenerates into sermons

Besides Tarangavatī, among other works of Pādaliṭṭa we mention the Prashna-Prakāsha, a work on astrology, and the Nirvāna-Kalikā, the oldest extant work dealing with ceremonies relating to the "Installation of Idols," and is known also as the "Pratishthā-Paddhati"—i.e. "Treatise on Installation" <sup>4</sup> The last-mentioned work is of great interest to the antiquarian, as it supplies "a link between the period of the composition of the Jaina holy scriptures and the date when they were systematically committed to writing The work is written in Sanskrit, in departure from the usual practice to write in the Aṛha-Māgadhī language of Jaina religious works

<sup>1</sup> Hiralal (Rai Bahadur), op cit, Int., p. xiii Cf. this story with the one given in the Jainistic recension of Vikramacarita—Edgerton, op. cit., p. 253

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 251

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Jhaveri, Nirvāna Kalikā, Int., pp. 12-13

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., Int., p. 1

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

of the time . . . The pomp attached to Ācāryship is great. Royal insignias, such as elephant, horse, palanquin, chowries, umbrella, as well as Yogapattaka (diagram for worship) and Khatika (pen), books, Crystal-bead-rosary, and sandals are presented to Acarya on conferment of the dignity . . . The reference in the Nitya-Karma-Vidhi to Ashta Mūrta (eightfold form, Śiva) is important, and shows that Jaina worship was influenced by Tāntrika Āgamas, where the chief deity is Śiva ”<sup>1</sup>

Thus from all that we have seen above this much is certain—that even the unrecorded period of Jaina history can safely claim to have had a copious and in part ancient literature. Though ours is in no sense an exhaustive survey of the traditional literature of the Jainas belonging to this period, there would be no exaggeration if we conclude that the Jaina literature of the period under discussion does not yield to any other Indian literature either in quality or in variety. All the species are represented in it, not only those which have an immediate bearing on the canonical writings—that is to say, the dogmatic, the moral, the polemic and the apologetic—but also history and legend, epic and romance, and lastly the sciences, such as astronomy and, above all, sciences like astrology and divination

<sup>1</sup> Jhaveri, op cit, Int, p 5

CHAPTER VIII

Jaina Art in the North

WE propose to deal in this chapter with the sculptural, architectural and pictorial contributions of the Jainas to the history of North Indian art in general. In the words of Dr Guérinot, "the Hindu art owes to them a great number of its most remarkable monuments. In the domain of architecture in particular they have reached a degree of perfection which leaves them almost without a rival" <sup>1</sup> It is doubtless true that Jainism finds its best expression in architecture. It is consequent on the Jaina belief, which is greater than that of the other Indian sects, in the efficacy of temple-building as a means of salvation that their architectural performances bear so much larger a proportion to their members than is the case with other sects.

In the first place they possess picturesqueness in a great degree. They love to construct their sanctuaries on the slopes of woody or naked hills, in wild places with boundless scope for decoration. The mountain masses of Gīrnār and Śatruñjaya, which rise abruptly to a height of three or four thousand feet above the plains, have veritable cities of temples on their tops. The grouping together of their temples into what may be called "cities of temples" is a peculiarity which the Jainas have practised to a greater extent than the followers of any other religion in India <sup>2</sup> "Specially on the summit of Śatruñjaya on every side sculptured chapels gorgeous in gold and colour stand silent and open, within are saints sitting grave and passionless behind the lights that burn on their altars. The multitude of calm stone faces, the strange silence and emptiness, unaccompanied by any sign of neglect or decay, the bewildering repetition of shrines and deities in this aerial castle, suggest nothing built with human purpose but some petrified spirit world" <sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Guérinot, La Religion Djaina, p. 279.

<sup>2</sup> Fergusson, History of Indian and Eastern Architecture, II, p. 24. Cf. Smith, A History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, p. 11.

<sup>3</sup> Elliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, I, p. 121.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

In spite of this variety of form and structure both the Śatruñjaya and the Gīrnār groups, barring a few Jaina caves beside the modern monastery or Math known as Bāwā Pyārā's Math in the east of Junāgadh,<sup>1</sup> do not possess any historical record or monument which can be traced back with any success. Even if there had been any such record left, "Full four centuries of Muslim rule have obliterated most of the traces of antiquity"<sup>2</sup>

As single edifices illustrating the beauty of the Jaina art both in grace of design and patient elaboration of workmanship may be mentioned the towers of Fame and Victory at Chitor, and the temples of Mount Abu. The latter Tīrtha, or sacred place of rendezvous, for minute delicacy of carving and beauty of detail stands almost unrivalled even in this land of patient and lavish labour. Likewise we may mention the Tīrtha of Samet Sīkhar or Pārasnāth in Bengal, of Rānpur, near Sādari, in Rajputana of Pāwāpurī, with its holy temples of Jalmandar and Thalmandar in Patna,<sup>3</sup> and so on, but most of these architectural remains of the Jainas, showing the love of the picturesque on their part, "belong either to the first or great age of Jaina architecture, which extended down to about the year 1300, or perhaps a little after that,"<sup>4</sup> or "to the middle style of Jaina architecture"<sup>5</sup> revived in the fifteenth century, especially under the reign of Kumbha, one of the most powerful of the kings of the Mewar dynasty, whose favourite capital was Chitor. But enlightening as it would be to follow the architectural, antiquarian and mythological interest attached to all these magnificent monuments of the Jainas, it would be departing from our purpose.

Just as with most of the architectural so also with the pictorial remains of the Jainas there is hardly anything which can be included in our survey here. No doubt specimens of Indian art, which have evolved under the austere influence of Jainism, are found in the shape of illustrated manuscripts, in works of Jaina theology or legends, and also in the shape of old "letters of apology" or Kshamāpanā or Vijñapti-patra, which the Jaina laity and clergy prepared with so much care and embellishment for sending them to

<sup>1</sup> Cf Burgess, ASWI, 1874-1875, pp 140-141, Plate XIX, etc. "There is no trace of distinctively Buddhist symbolism here, and, like the others, they were probably of Jaina origin"—Fergusson, op cit, p 31

<sup>2</sup> Ibid

<sup>3</sup> "Thalmandar", according to priests, is built on the spot where Mahāvīra died, the Jalmandar being the place of his cremation.—BODGP, p 224. Cf ibid, p 72

<sup>4</sup> Fergusson, op cit, p 59

<sup>5</sup> Ibid, p 60

JAINA CAVES AT JUNAGHAD BAWA PURA'S MATH

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

their ecclesiastical head of the neighbouring place on Samvatsarika—the last and the holiest of their eight-day festival of fasts; but all these distinctive traditions of Jaina æsthetics belong to the period of Jaina or Mediæval Gujarat painting which begins from the twelfth century A D <sup>1</sup>

Coming to the architectural and sculptural remains of the Jainas belonging to our period we find that our main sources lie in the Jaina caves on the Udayagiri and Khandagiri Hills in Orissa, on Mount Girnār in Junāgadh, and in the sculptural remains at the Kankālī-Tilā and other mounds in Mathura. However, before we proceed any further we shall make a few preliminary remarks bearing on certain characteristics of Indian art in general.

The first thing that should be borne in mind is that a sectarian classification of Indian art in general, as Fergusson has assumed, is rather defective. Really speaking, there are no Buddhist, Jaina or Brahmanical styles of architecture or sculpture, but only Buddhist, Jaina and Brahmanical remains in the Indian style of their period <sup>2</sup>. It is the provincial variations in its formal development, existing side by side with the secular variations in pure style, that tempt us to a sectarian classification of Indian art, but it is not correct <sup>3</sup>. No doubt, as we shall see later on, the varying practical requirements of the cult of each religion, of course, have an effect on the nature of the structure required for particular purposes, but otherwise "works of art, including architecture, should be classified with regard to their age and geographical position, not according to the creed for the service of which they were designed" <sup>4</sup>.

Thus there is no such thing, for example, as a Jaina style of architecture or sculpture. This becomes quite evident from the fact that the principal sculptures of both the Bauddhas and the Jainas are so nearly identical that it is not always easy for the

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Mehta, Studies in Indian Painting, pp. 1-2, Percy Brown, Indian Painting, pp. 38, 51.

<sup>2</sup> Buhler has emphasised the lesson taught by the Mathura discoveries that Indian art was not sectarian. "All religions—Buddhist, Jaina and Brahmanical—used the art of their age and country, and all alike drew on a common storehouse of symbolic and conventional devices. Stūpas, sacred trees, railings, wheels and so forth were available equally to the Jaina, Buddhist, or orthodox Hindu as religious or decorative elements"—Smith, The Jaina Stūpa and other Antiquities of Mathura, Int., p. 6. Cf. Buhler, E I, II, p. 322.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Coomaraswamy, History of Indian and Indonesian Art, p. 106. "But, although nearly all Indian art is religious, it is a mistake to suppose that style was dependent on creed. Fergusson's classical History of Indian Architecture is grievously marred by the erroneous assumption that distinct Buddhist, Jaina and Hindu styles existed"—Smith, A History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, p. 9.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

casual observer to distinguish what belongs to the one and what to the other, and it requires some experience to do this readily <sup>1</sup>

The other point of importance for a student of Indian art is that although almost all Hindu art is religious,<sup>2</sup> to the Hindus religious, æsthetic and scientific standpoints are not necessarily conflicting, and in all their finest work, whether musical, literary or plastic, these points of view, nowadays so sharply distinguished, are inseparably united. No doubt it remains to be seen whether this limitation or discipline serves as a source of power or makes it the slave of a didactic purpose, but nevertheless, though religious story, symbolism or history may serve to move the artist to action, they cannot alone suffice to guide his hand. The moment he has commenced to work art will step in and take the reins of genius from all three. This is why the "fiery religious zeal of Renaissance Italy with all her pictorial symbols does not seem to have deterred her artists from becoming better painters than preachers, true to their kind as decorators rather than as missionaries, so that Signorelli could not help himself from utilising his sacred themes as vehicles chiefly for his discoveries in the art of drawing from the life, and the admirers of Fra Bartolommeo sadly removed from the church wall his masterly but too alluring St Sebastian!" <sup>3</sup>

With these few introductory remarks about Indian art in general we now come to the particular remains of the Jains. Of these the first to strike our notice are the caves of Orissa, which are amongst the most interesting, though at the same time the most anomalous, of the caves in India. That most of them are Jaina caves goes without saying. In our chapter entitled "Jainism in Kalinga Deśa" we have referred to the images of Tirthankaras found in these caves and to the prominence given to Pārśva, whether among these images or by the use of his symbol, the serpent-hood. On examining the caves, however, no remains are found which could be clearly attributable to Buddhism—no dāgoba, no Buddha or

<sup>1</sup> "The Stūpas of the Jains were indistinguishable in form from those of the Buddhists, and a Jaina curvilinear steeple is identical in outline with that of a Brahmanical temple."—Ibid "even highly educated people are not able to distinguish the one class of images from the other"—Rao, Elements of Hindu Iconography, 1, pt 1, p 220

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Coomaraswamy, The Arts and Crafts of India and Ceylon, p 16 "an image made according to rule (Śāstra) is beautiful, no other forsooth is beautiful, some (deem) that beautiful which follows after (their own) fancy, but that not according to rule (appears) unlovely to the discerning"—Ibid "The Hindus always present an æsthetic principle in the guise of a religious precept"—Smith, op cit, p 8

<sup>3</sup> Solomon, The Charm of Indian Art, pp 86-87

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

Bodhisattva, no scene distinctly traceable to Buddhist legends. Trisūlas open or pointed, Stūpas, Swastikas, barred railings, railed trees, wheels, the goddess Śrī are found, but they are as common to Jainism as to other religions<sup>1</sup> Furthermore this is a fact generally accepted by competent scholars, antiquarians and archæologists like O'Malley,<sup>2</sup> Mon Mohan Chakravarti,<sup>3</sup> Bloch,<sup>4</sup> Fergusson,<sup>5</sup> Smith,<sup>6</sup> Coomaraswamy<sup>7</sup> and others

Thus the oldest extant Jaina sculptures show that, like the other sects, Jainas also excavated cave-dwellings or Bhikshugrhas for their recluses, but the practical requirements of their cult had an effect on the nature of the structure adopted by them. As a general convention Jaina monks did not live in large communities, and this combined with the nature of their religion did not necessitate them to have large assembly halls like the Cavyas of the Buddhists. As seen before, the oldest and the most numerous of these earliest caves of the Jaina sects are in the hill on the east called Udayagiri, the modern in the western portion designated Khandagiri. "The picturesqueness of their forms, the character of their sculptures and architectural details, combined with their great antiquity, render them one of the most deserving of a careful survey"<sup>8</sup>

If not from the architectural at least from the archæological point of view the first to arrest our notice among the Udayagiri caves is the Hāthigumphā cave, a great natural cavern, the brow of which must have been smoothed to admit of the inscription. As to the inscription, it has been already dealt with at length by us. Though as it stands now there is very little of architectural importance left in it, this much is certain—that in spite of its being a natural cavern, looking to the importance of the record the Hāthigumphā must have been an excavation of no mean consideration. This is because the predilection for cutting temples or caves in the rock is

<sup>1</sup> Cf Chakravarti (Mon Mohan), op cit, p 5, Fergusson, op cit, p 11

<sup>2</sup> O'Malley, B D G P, p 286

<sup>3</sup> "After having examined the caves carefully during my visits I have come to the conclusion that all the caves, so far as the present data are available, should be ascribed to the Jainas and not to the Buddhists"—Chakravarti (Mon Mohan), op and loc cit

<sup>4</sup> "That the caves contain nothing Buddhist, but apparently all belong to the Jainas, is a fact which is now, I think, generally accepted by all competent scholars"—Cf ibid, p 20

<sup>5</sup> "Till comparatively recently, however, they were mistaken for Buddhist, but thus they clearly never were"—Fergusson, op cit, i, p 177

<sup>6</sup> Cf Smith, op cit, p 84

<sup>7</sup> Cf Coomaraswamy, History of Indian and Indonesian Art, p 37

<sup>8</sup> Fergusson, op cit, ii, p 9

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

to be found in the great desire for lasting merit, which the solid rock offers over a structural edifice, the merit gained by the work would last as long as the work. Moreover, the fact that the Hāthigumphā cave was enlarged and improved by art gains further strength from the fact that as a general rule cave-cutters selected cliffs where the rock was solid and free from cracks and fissures, and not natural caverns, to facilitate their work. This is because a natural cavern means rotten rock, where fragments may drop at any time, and so make living within them dangerous.

As mentioned before, from the artistic point of view the greatest interest lies in the Rāni and the Ganeśa caves on the Udayagiri Hill. Both of them are two-storeyed caves with friezes, interrupted by the cell doorways, in both the upper and lower galleries. Of the two the Rāni is the largest and best decorated of all the caves,<sup>1</sup> and in it elaborately carved friezes represent various scenes of human activities. As to the scenes portrayed in these sculptures and those, more or less repeated in the Ganeśa cave, the District Gazetteer and reputed scholars like Chakravarti and others are of opinion that they relate to various incidents, legendary or otherwise, of Pārśva's life. We have referred to this fact before, and have also touched a little in detail upon the subject-matter of these friezes.

As to the sculpture of these early Jaina remains we find that, like the Mathura specimens which are to follow, there is here also a strange mixture of Greek and Indian elements in the dress of male and female figures, as well as in the draperies. This becomes confirmed in itself since the Yavanas were very much advanced during the centuries before the Christian era, and that Khāravela of the Hāthigumphā inscription had his share in forcing the great Indo-Greek king, Demetrios, to retreat from India. Moreover the figures in these scenes are cut in bold relief as at Mathura, and the women here too wear very thick ring anklets. This characteristic of the Orissa and other Jaina remains rightly emphasises the truth of the statement that "the interchange of ornamental motifs between the peoples of the earth must have been in progress since man first consciously produced decorative forms, and it is a psychological truth that such borrowed motifs invariably became modified in the process of application by the borrower. The extension of such borrowing and modification is endless, and motifs frequently return

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Coomaraswamy, op cit, p. 38

SECTION OF A FRIeze OF ANTIQUITIES OF THE RINCA APHÄ UDAAGIRE

PORTION OF A FRIeze IN THE UPPER VERANDAH OF THE RINCA APHÄ UDAAGIRE from Mitra The Antiquities of Orissa

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

to their earlier traces extraordinarily transformed — sometimes almost beyond recognition ”<sup>1</sup>

Besides this fact of the introduction of foreign elements in the realm of Jaina or Indian art of the pre-Gandhāra period we are of opinion that in this early Jaina sculpture there is a singular charm. Over and above its wealth of ornaments and skill in technique it is instinct with a remarkable freshness of feeling and wholesome joy of life, which ultimately breaks out into scenes of broad humour. These bas-reliefs, among other scenes of human activities, represent those of hunting, fighting, dancing, drinking and love-making, and, according to Fergusson, “anything, in fact, but religion or praying in any shape or form ”<sup>2</sup> This warmth of healthy humanity is characteristic of all the best Buddhist and Jaina art, and was only partly repressed by the classic reserve of the Gandhāra school, which next appears on the scene.

Space forbids any further discussion about the Jaina remains at Orissa. However two particular aspects of the Jaina contribution to art may be mentioned here before we pass on to the Mathura remains. The first is the institution of relic worship in the form of Stūpas, and the second that of idolatry among the Jainas. As mentioned before, from the fourteenth line of the Hāthigumphā inscription we learn that even prior to the age of the Mathura sculptures—as with the Buddhists so also with the Jainas—was prevalent the practice of erecting monuments or Stūpas on the remains of their teachers. “Doubtless the oldest Stūpas were not symbols of a religious cult, but memorials of the dead associated with the practice of burial instead of cremation ”<sup>3</sup> It may be that this line of worship was not so common with the Jainas as with the Buddhas, and it is certain that it was out of date after a short span of its popularity, but from the Vodva Stūpa from Mathura, which, as seen before, was built by the gods, we can affirm this much—that Stūpa-worship with the Jainas also had reached a definite stage.

The chief ground for such an assertion is that “Stūpas were, originally, great mounds of earth raised over the ashes of a chief or religious leader, and surrounded by wooden rails to protect them. Later they were built in brick or stone with an earthen core, a stone railing taking the place of a wooden one ”<sup>4</sup> That the Vodva and

<sup>1</sup> Andrews, Influences of Indian Art, Int., p. 11

<sup>2</sup> Fergusson, op. cit., p. 15

<sup>3</sup> Havell, Ancient and Medieval Architecture of India, p. 46

<sup>4</sup> Cousens, Architectural Antiquities of Western India, p. 8

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

other Stūpas at Mathura do not resemble Stūpa architecture in its primitive form is clear on the very face of it. We find in them a stone railing taking the place of a wooden one, and besides this a lavish decoration applied to the exterior

The second point<sup>1</sup> that we are to consider now is the iconography of the Jainas. From the Hāthigumphā inscription we have seen that the Jainas used to have images of their Jinas as far back as the days of the Nandas. This is partially confirmed by the Mathura remains that the Jainas of the Indo-Scythic period used for their sculptures materials from an old temple. In accordance with Smith this state of facts shows indeed at least this much, that there was a Jaina temple in Mathura before 150 B.C.<sup>2</sup> Moreover from the traditional literature of the Jainas we have seen that, even in the days of Mahāvira, Pārśva was the Tīrthankara worshipped by his father and the Jaina Samgha of those days. However, we need not concern ourselves with the question as to when exactly idol-worship was taken up by the Jainas, though this much seems certain, that in one form or the other it has been prevalent from the days of Mahāvira.

What we are immediately concerned with is the iconography of the Jainas. The proper objects of worship are the twenty-four Jinas or Tīrthankaras, but, like the Mahāyana Buddhists, they also allow the existence of Hindu gods, and have admitted into their sculptures at least such of them as are connected with the tales of their saints—among which are Indra or Śakra, Garuda, Sarasvatī, Lakshmī, Gandharvas, Apsaras, etc., forming a pantheon of their own, divided into four classes—Bhavanādhīpatīs, Vyāntaras, Jyotiṣhkas and Vaimānikas.<sup>3</sup> The Tīrthankaras, as already mentioned, are recognisable by a cognizance, or Cinha, usually placed below the image. We have seen that more than one cave in Orissa is noted for the figures of Jaina Tīrthankaras, with their characteristic symbols or Lāñchanas, and for those of seated Jinas carved in moderate relief. Similar statues of the Jaina Tīrthankaras are found among the Mathura remains also, and as a class they represent the Digambara mode of representation of the Jaina Tīrthankaras.<sup>4</sup> Thus even historically the series of twenty-four portraits (Tīrthankaras), each with his distinctive emblem, was evidently

<sup>1</sup> Smith, The Jaina Stūpa and other Antiquities of Mathura, Int., p. 3.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Bühler, Indian Sect of the Jainas, pp. 66 ff.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Vogel, Catalogue of the Archaeological Museum at Mathura, p. 41. For further details about the Tīrthankara images at Mathura Museum see ibid., pp. 41-43, 66-82.

ANCIENT JAINA BRICK STUPE EXCAVATED MATHURA

© copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

firmly believed in at the beginning of the Christian era, and even earlier

The Tirthankaras are generally represented seated in the same cross-legged attitude as Buddha, with the same stolid, contemplative expression of countenance. If the dancing figures in both the Orissa and Mathura sculptures stand for evolution, the everlasting becoming, the Yogī type of seated Jina is an equally dramatic image of withdrawal, of complete independence of evolution. It is well to remember that this does not represent any sort of mortification of the flesh, it is simply the position which has been adopted by Indian thinkers from time immemorial as most convenient for meditation. It need not also be considered as expressionless because it does not reflect the individual peculiarities which make up expression as we commonly conceive it. On the other hand, in the opinion of Rothenstein the plastic interpretation of Samādhi, or religious absorption, forms one of the supreme conceptions in the history of art which the world owes to the genius of India. "This concrete crystallisation of a spiritual mood," observes the learned scholar, "was developed into a form so perfect and inevitable that it remains, after more than 2000 years, one of the most inspiring and satisfying symbols erected by man"<sup>1</sup>

Coming to the Jaina remains in Mathura, a city of immemorial antiquity, it may be said that they were excavated from or near the Kankālī or Jainī mound (Tilā), about half-a-mile south of the Katrā. The importance of this school in the history of Indian art lies as a link between old Indian and mediæval sculpture and its close affinity with the Gandhāra school, so called because its centre was in the region of Gandhāra, the north-western frontier, and most of its finest creations have been found there. "Geographically," observes Smith, "Mathura occupies a central position intermediate between Gandhāra to the north-west, Amarāvati to the south-east, and Sārnāth to the east. It is therefore not surprising that the local school of art should display intermediate characters, linking it on the one hand with the Hellenistic art of Gandhāra, and on the other with the purely Indian schools of the interior."<sup>2</sup> This Gandhāra-Mathura school seems to have sprung up in the first century B.C., and flourished in full maturity between A.D. 50

<sup>1</sup> Rothenstein, Examples of Indian Sculpture, Int., p. 8

<sup>2</sup> Smith, History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, p. 183 Cf. Vogel, op. cit., p. 19

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

and 200<sup>1</sup> It arose from the adoption of the Hellenistic models to the older art of India, which gradually assimilated to its own spirit

"The phrase 'Gandhāra school,'" observes Dr Barnett, "is a collective term denoting the labours of many artists working in various materials through several generations with a considerable variety of technique Sometimes they blindly copied Hellenistic models, with the dubious success due to clever imitation Usually, however, they did more together with the figures, draperies, and motives which they borrowed from Hellenism they imported a spirit of Greek refinement and dignity, of beauty and harmony, which raised the forms of the older art to a nobler level, without weakening its sincerity and humanity"<sup>2</sup>

This introduction of foreign elements into the art of India and the extension of Indian taste abroad are a natural outcome of the political and commercial intercourse which India had with the world outside This is why the geographical India of to-day includes the homes of numerous races whose ideals of art, as of religion are far from being identical, and who, being in many cases immigrant even down to late historical times, have introduced foreign elements of decorative art, which, like the immigrants themselves, have become naturalised and have also acquired a local patina However, according to Andrews, on climatic and other grounds hardly any interesting facts concerning art matters can be gleaned from the lands most affected by contact with India, and hence "most of our knowledge of the Arts has to be compiled from the internal evidence of such objects as have survived the destructive forces of climate and fanaticism"<sup>3</sup>

With these few preliminary remarks about the Mathura school in general we shall now study some specimens of Jaina sculpture found at the Kankālī mound, and shall see how far Jaina artists were governed by the immutable law of the undisputed obedience which Art exacts from her votaries, and how far they succeeded in bringing about a healthy assimilation of Hellenistic elements

Of the few specimens of Mathura sculptures which we are to describe here we shall take first the very interesting and beautiful works technically known as Āyāgapatas "An Āyāgapata," observes Dr Buhler, "is an ornamental slab, bearing the representation

<sup>1</sup> This culmination of the art of the school may be dated from about A D 50 to A D 150 or 200"—Smith, op cit, p 99

<sup>2</sup> Barnett, Antiquities of India, p 233

<sup>3</sup> Andrews, op cit, Int., p 12

AS AGAPATA OR ' TABLET OF HOMAGE MATHURA

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

of a Jina or some other object of worship, and the term may be appropriately rendered by 'tablet of homage or of worship,' since such slabs were put up in temples, as the numerous inscriptions on them say, 'for the worship of the Arhats'. Among the Jainas they probably went out of fashion at an early period, as the inscriptions on them invariably show archaic characters, and are in no case known to be dated"<sup>1</sup>

The Āyāgapatas seem to be not the exclusive but a prominent feature of the ancient Jaina art. As usual, the aim that the Jaina sculpture had in view in these highly decorated tablets "was not the independent creation of beauty. Their art was the dependent art of the decorator of architectural monuments"<sup>2</sup>. Nevertheless there is nothing strange if the central disc of the Yogī type of seated Jina, the highly ornamental Trisūlas, accompanied by a great variety of sacred symbols, the exquisite curvilinear ornaments, and the massive pillars in the Persian Achæmenian style were to prejudice the art-loving visitor so as not to easily believe that symbolism was a prime motive of Mathura's sculptures in their handling of their chisels upon these "tablets of worship". On the other hand, at least with regard to these Āyāgapatas, one may go even a step further and assert that they showed their supremacy in the vitality and independence of their creations, and thus being enthusiastic artists themselves they must have often utilised religious themes as an excuse for rather than as the end and aim of their productions.

Of these, two Āyāgapatas may be mentioned here—the one set up by Śivayaśā, the wife of the dancer Phaguyaśa,<sup>3</sup> and the other by Āmohmī, as mentioned before, of the year 42 of the Lord, the Mahākshatrapa Śodāsa. The first composition, in the words of Smith, "gives an interesting view of a Jaina Stūpa, which was surrounded by a perambulation path guarded by a railing. The path is approached through a highly decorated Torana gateway, to which four steps ascend. A heavy wreath hangs from the lowest beam of the gateway. A dancing girl completely nude except for a sash of the usual jewellery round the hips stands in an immodest attitude on the railing on each side of the gate. Two massive pillars with peculiar bases are shown, and a small portion of the railing surrounding an upper perambulation path is visible"<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Bühler, E I, II, p. 314.

<sup>2</sup> Chanda, A S I, 1922-1923, p. 166.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Bühler, op cit No V, p. 200.

<sup>4</sup> Smith, The Jaina Stūpa and other Antiquities of Mathura, p. 10, Plate XII.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

On this beautifully carved Torana there is a brief dedication, and according to Smith the characters of this inscription are "little more archaic than those of Dhanabhūti's inscriptions on the gateway of the Bharhut Stūpa, dated in the reign of the Sungas, or about 150 B.C."<sup>1</sup> Dr Bühler also has grouped it under the name of "archaic," but he limits himself to the remark that it belongs to the period before Kanishka.<sup>2</sup> As to the artistic merits of this Āyāgapata one need not be guided by mere sentiment. There are tests more universal than those of particular canons or personal likes and dislikes. To Vincent Smith the attitude of the two female figures represented here seems immodest. Likewise the female statues appearing on some railings elsewhere are also considered by him indecently naked.<sup>3</sup> It seems, in cases such as these, it is the immediate or apparent subject-matter—the representative element—which gives vent to personal likes and dislikes, and the meaning of art no more remains for us far deeper than that of its immediate subject.

As it is, the female figures both in the Āyāgapata of Śivayaśā and on some railing pillars, either standing or crouching grotesque dwarfs or in some other pose, are not to incite good or bad actions, since nearly all art which has any conscious purpose is sentimental. The true ethical value of art appears in its quality of detachment and vision. The light in which the ancient Indian artists envisaged woman was serene, frank and generous. The thick ring anklets, the light wisp of drapery, the heavy ear ornaments, armlets, necklace and girdle enrich but do not conceal the all-conquering and triumphant nudity. There exists not a trace either of immodesty or the diffidence of false shame in this arboreal beauty. Within no mean or narrow compass but in the palace of their souls did the artists at Mathura, as at Sāncī and elsewhere, enshrine woman, and so they enskied her image—the immortal symbol of all beauty—stamped, as was fitting, in everlasting stone, and outlined against the blue-black ground of heaven.

Coming to the tablet of homage set up by Āmohinī, Smith observes "This fine votive tablet, which is essentially an Āyāgapata,

<sup>1</sup> Smith, The Jaina Stūpa and other Antiquities of Mathura, Int., p. 3

<sup>2</sup> Bühler, op cit., p. 196

<sup>3</sup> According to Coomaraswamy these female figures are not dancing girls, as Smith has observed. In his opinion "they are Yakṣīs, Devatās or Vṛkṣakas, nymphs and dryads, and to be regarded as auspicious emblems of vegetative fertility, derived from popular beliefs"—Coomaraswamy, op cit., p. 64. Cf. Vogel, ASI, 1900-1910, p. 77

TABLET OF HO-NAGE SET UP BY SIVANASA

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

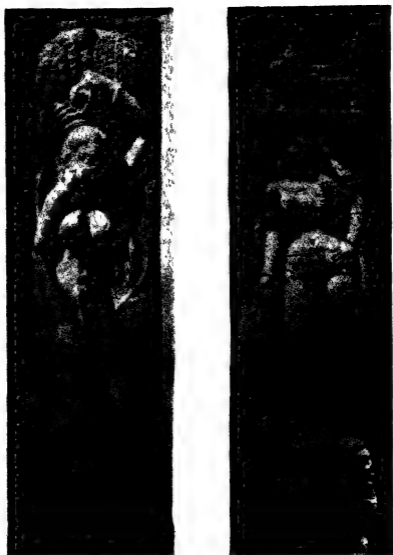

AYAGAPATA WITH JINA MATHUNA 1ST CENTURY AD

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

VOTIVE TABLE SET UP BY AMOHINI

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

RAHING PILLARS WITH HUMAN FIGURES (MATHURA)

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

SCULPTURE CONNECTED WITH THE VODAVSIPPA RELIGION BY THE GODS

Copyrighted by the Government of India

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

though not so called, represents a royal lady attended by three women and a child. The attendant women, in accordance with the ancient Hindu fashion, which survived to modern times in Southern India, are naked to the waist. One holds an umbrella over her mistress, whom another fans. The third holds a wreath (hār) ready for presentation. The execution is bold, and not altogether wanting in artistic merit " <sup>1</sup>

Next to these Ayāgapatas we may mention the sculpture connected with the Vodva Stūpa built by the gods. The sacred symbol in the centre of the composition consists of a Dharmacakra supported by a Trisūla, which itself rests on a lotus. The Dharmacakra, or the Wheel of the Law, as the emblem of their respective creeds, is common to all three sects—the Jainas, the Brahmans and the Bauddhas <sup>2</sup>. The particular Cakra that appears here " differs from those on the Buddhist and other Jaina sculptures by the two ear-like projections at the top, as well as by the addition of two Sankhas, which lean against the basis " <sup>3</sup>. The group of worshippers on the right of the picture is formed of four female figures holding garlands in their hands, wherewith they evidently intend to worship the Arhat mentioned in the inscription. Each of the first three figures holds up in her right hand a long-stalked lotus flower, while the fourth one, which looks smaller and apparently much younger, clasps her hands in an attitude of adoration, and is partly hidden behind the stiff Assyrian-looking lion which crouches at the end of the slab. According to Dr Buhler the faces of these females look like portraits, <sup>4</sup> and their dress, which is a bit peculiar, consists of a single long robe covering the whole body to the feet and confined at the waist.

There is some difficulty about the mutilated portion of the slab. The male figure on the right of the Dharmacakra is considered by Dr Buhler to be that of a " naked ascetic, who, as usual, has a piece of cloth hanging over his right arm. This is probably the Arhat mentioned in the inscription " <sup>5</sup>. It is difficult to say if this is a

<sup>1</sup> Smith, op cit, p. 21, Plate XIV

<sup>2</sup> " it would be surprising if the worship of Stūpas, of sacred trees, of the Wheel of the Law, and so forth, more or less distinct traces of which are found with all sects, as well as their representations in sculptures, were due to one sect alone instead of being heirlooms handed down from remote times before the beginning of the historical period of India "—Buhler, op cit, p. 823

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, p. 821. For a specimen of Buddhist sculpture see Fergusson, Tree and Serpent Worship, Plate XXIX, Fig. 2

<sup>4</sup> Buhler, op and loc cit

<sup>5</sup> Ibid

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

naked figure of an ascetic According to Smith it is one of the four male worshippers who have formed the other side of the slab<sup>1</sup> In our opinion, too, Smith's view seems to be more acceptable, because then the whole sculpture would be representing a group of male and female lay-worshippers preparing for the homage of the Arhat mentioned in the record

The importance of this specimen of Mathura sculpture lies in this, that it is connected with the Vodva Stūpa built by the gods We have already referred to the significance of the words "built by the gods" It must have been built several centuries before the beginning of the Christian era, for the name of its builder would assuredly have been known if it had been erected during the period when the Jainas of Mathura carefully kept record of their donations The Jaina tradition about it, as reproduced by Smith, runs as follows "The Stūpa was originally of gold, adorned with precious stones, and was erected in honour of the seventh Jina, Supārśvanātha, by the goddess Kuberā, at the desire of two ascetics named Dharmaruci and Dharmaghosha In the time of the twenty-third Jina, Pārśvanātha, the golden Stūpa was encased in bricks, and a stone temple was built outside"<sup>2</sup>

Besides these few specimens of Mathura sculpture we may mention the Torana, showing the veneration of holy objects and places by human and mythological beings The artist in these Toranas does not want to illustrate any particular text or legend, but merely wishes to show how eager gods and men are to pay homage to the Tirthankaras, to their Stūpas and temples This is why the scenes refer to the worship of one or several Jaina sanctuaries and to processions of pilgrimages undertaken for this purpose.

Amongst these sculptures is one which apparently possesses very considerable archæological interest It is a Torana bearing a relief which represents the worship of a Stūpa by two Suparnas—half birds and half men—and by five centaurs or Kinnaras All the five figures wear turbans, such as many males of rank represented on Buddhist sculptures wear. "A somewhat similar scene," observes Buhler, "where Suparnas worship a Stūpa occurs on a relievo at Sānchi"<sup>3</sup> But it must be noted that the Sānchi figures are much more like Greek harpies, while those on our slab are done

<sup>1</sup> Smith, op cit, p 12

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p 15

<sup>3</sup> Cf Fergusson, op cit, Plate XXVII, Fig 1

OBVERSE AND REVERSE OF A TORIN I REPRESENTING GODS AND MEN PAYING HOMAGE TO TIRTHANKARAS

(op. right reserved Archaeological Survey of India)

OBVERSE AND REVERSE OF A TORANA NIATHURA

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India.

ORNAMENTS IN SLAB RELIEF CARVING, TULE WADDELL SITE, CALIFORNIA. (See also page 11)

JAINA ART IN THE NORTH

in a more conventional manner, like the winged figures on the Assyrian and Persian sculptures. Among Brahmanical representations those of Garuda, the king of Suparnas, on the Gupta seals<sup>1</sup> are worthy of comparison. Centaurs have been discovered on the Buddhist monuments in Gaya and elsewhere, and in all probability they go back to Greek models. What is particularly remarkable in those on our slab is the branch which hides the place where the human body is united with the rump of the horse.<sup>2</sup> As far as I have been able to ascertain from my colleagues versed in classical archæology there are no Greek sculptures showing this particular."<sup>3</sup>

As to the figures on its reverse, the Torana beam retains a fragment of a procession, apparently about to visit some sacred place. The cart closely resembles a modern Shighrām, and the driver, who lifts his goad, is seated, as is still the custom, on the pole. The trappings of the several animals are exactly like those represented on the Sāncī sculptures. But similar carts are not traceable on the latter, where very Greek-looking chariots<sup>4</sup> drawn by horses appear instead.<sup>5</sup>

Taking last the ornamental slab, the obverse of which represents Nemesa's feat of transferring the embryo of Mahāvira, and the reverse showing female dancers and musicians rejoicing at the great feat, once again we realise that the religious stories and moral lessons which the Indian artist was employed to advertise did not interfere with his freedom to perfection. The Mathura carver seems to have succeeded in creating the most satisfying æsthetic forms precisely at the periods when their services were in the greatest request for purposes of propaganda among the priestly and royal patrons. Especially when he was employed to illustrate some well-known story or legend he could, to an unusual degree, use traditional canons of proportion and gesture, and reconcile these with a dæmonic energy.

Besides this slab representing the popular tradition of the transfer of Mahāvira's embryo there are four mutilated statues lithographed by Cunningham. Two of these figures represent seated females. Each of them has a small child lying in a dish

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Fleet, C I I, III, Plate XXXVII, Smith, J. A. S. B., LVIII, pp. 85 ff., Plate VI.

<sup>2</sup> "No other example is known of a leaf being used to mask the junction between the human and equine bodies in the centaurs"—Smith, History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, p. 82.

<sup>3</sup> Bühler, op. cit., p. 319.

<sup>4</sup> Ferguson, op. cit., Plate XXXIII, ibid., Plate XXXIV, Fig. 1.

<sup>5</sup> Bühler, op. cit. and loc. cit.

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

on her lap. The left hand supports the dish, but the right is raised up to the shoulder. Both females appear to be naked. The other two figures are those of Naigamesha, and rightly are they "goat-headed," according to Dr Buhler, as also the figure in the other sculpture. Comparing this slab<sup>1</sup> with that of the four figures of Cunningham<sup>2</sup> the eminent Orientalist observes: "The very close resemblance of the position of the infant, and the attitude of the female holding it, is at once apparent. And this point, taken together with the unmistakable figure of Naigamesha-Nemeso, irresistibly leads to the conclusion that the legend referred to must be the same in both cases."<sup>3</sup>

In fact the cave temples and dwellings excavated in Orissa and at Junāgadh or Gīrnār in Gujarat, with their elaborately carved friezes and finished to the minutest detail and ornament, and the richly decorated Āyāgapatas and Toranas of the Mathura find, stand before us not as remains but as living oracles of art. They combine in them the Triune Entity of Indian art—a sublime union of the purely Decorative, the Realistic and the purely Spiritual. This is felt rather than seen, for the differences between the one and the other are to be found, not in the fields of artistic knowledge, however wide, but in the terra incognita of Taste.

<sup>1</sup> Buhler, op cit, Plate II, a

<sup>2</sup> Cunningham, A S I, xx, Plate IV

<sup>3</sup> Buhler, op cit, p. 318

FOUR MUTILATED STATUES REPRESENTING THE TRANSFER OF MAHĀVĪRA'S EMBRYO

Copyright reserved Archaeological Survey of India

CONCLUSION

IF nothing succeeds like success, the great triumph of Jainism in holding its own against its numerous rivals in the north discredits the view that Jainism, like Buddhism, did not strike deep roots in North India, and that there was nothing like a Jaina period in the history of India<sup>1</sup>. With all deference to the scholars who maintain such views, we venture to believe that the study of Jainism in North India attempted in the foregoing pages, inadequate as it is in many ways, is sufficient evidence to the contrary. Whatever may be the antiquity of Jainism in North India, no one can deny that there is enough conclusive evidence to the effect that, at least from the days of Pāṇva or from 800 B.C. down to the conversion of the great Vikrama by Siddhasena Divākara in the beginning of the Christian era, and to some extent even throughout the Kushāna and the Gupta periods, Jainism was the most powerful religion in the north. During this glorious period of more than a thousand years there was not a single dynasty in the north, whether great or small, that did not come under its influence at one time or another.

Leaving aside a few points of historical importance here and there, almost every chapter in the present work deals with matters about which long researches have been made, and various opinions have been recorded. Thus, more or less, ours has been a humble attempt to string together, in methodical order, the results of the labours of able scholars, in order to produce a readable work on the unrecorded period of Jaina history—and not to compose an elaborate work of discussions on Jaina antiquities. In fulfilment of this any betrayal into conjectures and suppositions should be accepted as such, and not as historical discoveries. As far as possible details have been suppressed, nevertheless repetition has not been avoided where such repetition seemed necessary to bring out cardinal facts and salient features of this period of North Indian Jainism, which happily coincides with the hey-day of its powers.

However, until the numerous Jaina inscriptions and manuscripts which exist everywhere in the north are collected and translated, and until plans are made of the architectural remains and statistics gathered, it is idle to speculate either about the extent and strength of Jainism in the north or about its vicissitudes during its existence there. It is a task worthy of being attempted, for, if successfully carried out, it would add to our scanty stores of knowledge one of the most interesting chapters still available for the religious and artistic history of the people of India.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Smith, Oxford History of India, p. 55

JAINISM IN NORTH INDIA

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

SOURCES

1 Archæological and Epigraphical

- ALLAN, JOHN Catalogue of the Coins of the Gupta Dynasties and of Śaśānka, King of Gauda London, 1914
- Annual Report of the Mysore Archæological Department for the Year 1923, pp 10 ff Bangalore, 1924
- BANERJI, R D Inscriptions in the Udayagiri and Khandagiri Caves EI, xiii, 1915-1916, pp 159 ff
- BANERJI, R D Note on the Hāthigumphā Inscription of Khāravela J B O R S, iii, 1917, pp 486 ff
- BEGLAR, J D Tours in the South-Eastern Provinces A.S.I., xiii, 1882
- BHAGWANLAL INDRAJI, PANDIT The Hāthigumphā and three other Inscriptions in the Udayagiri Caves near Cuttack Actes du Sixième Congrès International des Orientalistes, Troisième Partie, Section 2, Aryenne, Liège, 1885, pp 133 ff
- BHAGWANLAL INDRAJI, PANDIT The Kahāun Inscription of Skandagupta IA, x, 1881, pp 125 ff
- BHANDARKAR, R G On Dr Hoernle's Version of a Nasik Inscription and the Gāthā Dialect IA, xii, 1883, pp 139 ff
- BLOCH, T Conservation in Bengal ASI, 1902-1903, 1904, pp 37 ff
- BUHLER, G New Jaina Inscriptions from Mathura EI, i, 1892, pp 371 ff
- BUHLER, G Further Jaina Inscriptions from Mathura EI, i, 1892, pp 393 ff
- BUHLER, G Further Jaina Inscriptions from Mathura EI, ii, 1894, pp 195 ff
- BUHLER, G The Nānāghāt Inscriptions ASWI, v, 1883, pp 59 ff
- BUHLER, G Aśoka's Rock Edicts according to the Gīrnār, Shāhbāzgarhī, Kālsī and Manshira Versions EI, ii, 1894, pp 147 ff
- BUHLER, G The Pillar Edicts of Aśoka EI, ii, 1894, pp 245 ff
- BUHLER, G The Three New Edicts of Aśoka IA, vii., 1878, pp 141 ff

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BÜHLER, G Indische Palæographie Encyclopædia of Indo-Aryan Research, pp 1 ff
- BUHLER, G Specimens of Jaina Sculptures from Mathura EI, 11, 1894, pp 311 ff
- BUHLER, G The Barābar and Nāgārjunī Hill Cave Inscriptions of Aśoka and Dasaratha IA, xx, 1891, pp 361 ff
- BUHLER, G The Madhuban Copper-Plate of Harsha, dated Samvat 25 EI, 1, 1892, pp 67 ff
- BUHLER, G The Jaina Inscriptions from Śatruñjaya EI, 11, 1894, pp 34 ff
- BURGESS, JAMES Caves in Junāgadh, and elsewhere in Kāthiāwād ASWI, Kāthiāwād and Kachh, 1874-1875, 1876, pp 139 ff
- CHAKRAVARTI, MON MOHAN Notes on the Remains in Dhauli and in the Caves of Udayagiri and Khandagiri Calcutta, 1902
- CHANDA, RAMAPRASAD Dates of the Votive Inscriptions on the Stūpas of Sāंची Memoirs of the Archaeological Survey of India, No 1, 1919, pp 1 ff
- CHANDA, RAMAPRASAD Khāravela JRAS, 1919 pp 395 ff
- CHANDA, RAMAPRASAD The Mathura School of Sculpture ASI 1922-1923, pp 164 ff
- COLEBROOKE, H T On Inscriptions at Temples of the Jaina Sect in South Bihar Miscellaneous Essays 11, Madras, 1872, pp 315 ff
- CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER Inscriptions of Asoka CII, 1, 1879
- CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER ASI, 1871-1872, 111, 1873
- CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER ASI, 1878-1879, xiv, 1882
- CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER Coins of Mediæval India London, 1884
- CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER ASI, 1881-1882, xvii, 1884
- CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER ASI, 1882-1883, xx, 1885
- DOWSON, J Ancient Inscriptions from Mathura JRAS, v (New Series), pp 182 ff
- FLEET, J F Records of the Somawamsi Kings of Katak EI, 111, 1894-1895 pp 323 ff
- FLEET, J F The Hāthigumphā Inscription JRAS, 1910, pp 824 ff
- FLEET, J F The Rumdei Inscription and the Conversion of Aśoka to Buddhism JRAS, 1908, pp 471 ff
- FLEET, J F Sanskrit and Old Canarese Inscriptions IA, vii, 1878, pp 15 ff, 33 ff, 101 ff
- FLEET, J F Inscriptions of the Early Gupta Kings and their Successors CII, 111, 1888
- GARDNER, PERCY Catalogue of Indian Coins, Greek and Scythic London, 1886
- GROWSE, F S Mathura Inscriptions IA, vi, 1877, pp 216 ff

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- HULTZSCH, E. Mahiyapundi Grant of Ammarāja II EI, ix, 1907-1908, pp 47 ff
- HULTZSCH, E. Inscriptions of Aśoka CII, i (new ed.), 1925
- HULTZSCH, E. Inscriptions on the Three Jaina Colossi of Southern India EI, vii, 1902-1903, pp 108 ff
- HULTZSCH, E. Two Inscriptions from General Cunningham's Archaeological Reports IA, xi, 1882, pp 309 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. Hāthigumphā Inscription of the Emperor Khāravela (173-160 B.C.) JBORS, iii, 1917, pp 425 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. A Further Note on the Hāthigumphā Inscription JBORS, iii, 1917, pp 473 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. Hāthigumphā Inscription Revised from the Rock JBORS, iv, 1918, pp 364 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. Hāthigumphā Inscription of the Emperor Khāravela JBORS, xiii, 1927, pp 221 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. Hāthigumphā Notes JBORS, xiv, 1928, pp 150 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. An Inscription of the Sunga Dynasty JBORS, x, 1924, pp 202 ff
- JAYASWAL, K. P. The Statue of Wema Kadaphises and Kushān Chronology JBORS, vi, 1920, pp 12 ff
- JINAVIJAYA MUNI. Prācina Jaina Lekha Sangraha, i Bhavanagar, 1917
- KONOW, SIEN. Epigraphic ASI, 1903-1906, 1909, pp 165 ff
- KONOW, SIEN. Taxila Inscription of the Year 136 EI, xiv, 1917-1918, pp 284 ff
- KONOW, SIEN. The Ara Inscription of Kanishka II the Year 41 EI, xiv, 1917-1918, pp 130 ff
- LUDERS, H. A List of Brāhmī Inscriptions from the Earliest Times to about A.D. 400 EI, x, 1912, Appendix I
- MAZUMDAR, R. C. Hāthigumphā Inscription IA, xlvii, 1918, pp 223 ff
- MAZUMDAR, R. C. Second Note on the Hāthigumphā Inscription of Khāravela IA, xlviii, 1919, pp 187 ff
- NARASIMACHAR, R. Inscriptions at Śravana Belgola EC, ii, 1923
- PRINSEP, JAMES. Note on Inscriptions at Udayagiri and Khadagiri in Cuttack, in the Lāt Character JASB, vi, 1837, pp 1072 ff
- PRINSEP, JAMES. Translation of Inscription in the Society's Museum — Brahmeswara Inscription, from Cuttack JASB, vii, 1838, pp 557 ff
- PRINSEP, JAMES. Facsimiles of Ancient Inscriptions JASB, vii, 1838, pp 33 ff
- SASTRI, BANERJI A. The Lomaśa Rsi Cave Façade JBORS, xii, 1926, pp 309 ff

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- SENART, E The Inscriptions of Piyadasi I.A, xx, 1891, pp. 229 ff.
 SMITH, VINCENT A The Jaina Stūpa and other Antiquities of Mathura Allahabad, 1901
 SMITH, VINCENT A Inscribed Seal of Kumāra Gupta. J A S B, lviii, 1889, pp 84 ff
 VOGEL, J. PH Mathura School of Sculpture A S I, 1909-1910, 1914, pp 68 ff
 VOGEL, J PH Catalogue of the Archæological Museum at Mathura Allahabad, 1910
 WILSON, H H On the Rock Inscriptions of Kapur di Giri, Dhauli and Girnār J R A S, xii, pp 153 ff

II Literary

- The Mahābhārata, Vana Parva (Ganapat Krishnaji) Bombay, Saka, 1798
Kālikācārya-Kathā (Devchand Lalbhai) Bombay, 1914
Brahmapurāṇa (Anandasrama Series) 1895
 ABHAYADEVASŪRI Bhagavatī-Sūtra of Sudharma, 1-111 (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1918-1921
 ABHAYADEVASŪRI Aupapātika-Sūtra, with Commentary (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1916
 ABHAYADEVASŪRI Jñātā Dharma Kathāṅga of Sudharma (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1919
 ABHAYADEVASŪRI Sthānāṅga of Sudharma, 11 (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1920.
 BARNETT, L D The Antagada-Dasāo and Anuttarovavūnya-Dāsāo London, 1907
 BECHARDAS, PANDIT Bhagavatī-Sūtra of Sudharma, 1, 11 (Jināgama Prakāśakasabhā) Bombay, 1918
 BELVALKAR, S K The Brahma-Sūtras of Bādarāyana Poona, 1923
 BHANDARKAR, R G Report on the Search for Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Bombay Presidency during the Year 1883-1884 Bombay, 1887
 BUHLER, G The Laws of Manu S B E, xxv, 1886
 BÜHLER, G Vāsishtha and Baudhāyana S B E, xiv, 1882.
 CANDRAPRABHASŪRI Prabhāvaka-Charita, 1 Bombay, 1909
 CANDRASŪRI. Samgrahani-Sūtra Bombay, 1881
 CANDRASŪRI Niryāvalika-Sūtra, with Commentary (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1922
 CHAKRAVARTI, A Pañcāstikāyasāra by Kundakundācārya S B J, 111, 1920
 CHARPENTIER, JARL The Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra, 1, 11 Upsala, 1922

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- CHATURVIJAYA, MUNI Kuvalayamālā-Kathā of Ratnaprabhasūri (Jaina Ātmānanda Sabhā) Bhavanagar, 1916
- COWELL, E B, and GOUGH, A E Sarva-Darśana-Samgraha of Mādhavācārya (Popular Ed) London, 1914
- COWELL, E B, and NEIL, R A The Dvyaṅvadāna Cambridge, 1886
- DHANEŚVARASŪRI Satruñjaya-Māhātmya Jamanagar, 1908
- DHARMADĀSAGANI Upadeśamālā (Jaina Dharma Prasāraka Sabhā) Dhruva, K H Sāchunsvapna (1st ed) Ahmedabad, 1916
- DVIVEDI, MAHAMAHOPADHYAYA SUDHAKARA The Brhat-Samhitā of Varāhamihira 1, 11 Benares, 1895
- EDGERTON, FRANKLIN Vikrama's Adventures, 1 H O S, xxvi, Cambridge, 1926
- FAUSBOLL, V The Jātaka, III, IV London, 1883, 1887
- FEER, M LÉON Samyutta-Nikāya, 11 London, 1888
- GEIGER, WILHELM The Mahāvamsa London, 1908
- GHOSAL, SARAT CHANDRA Dravyasamgraha of Namicandra S B J., 1, 1917
- GRIFFITH, RALPH T H Hymns of the Rīgveda, 11 (2nd ed) Benares, 1897
- GUÉRINOT, A Essai de Bibliographie Jaina Paris, 1906
- HARIBHADRASŪRI Āvaśyaka-Sūtra of Sudharma (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1916-1917
- HARIBHADRASŪRI Shaddarsanasamuccaya Benares, 1905
- HEMACANDRA Abhidhānacintāmani
- HEMACANDRA Trishashti-Salākā - Puruṣa - Caritra, Parvas, ix, x (Jaina Dharma Prasāraka Sabhā) Bhavanagar, 1908, 1909
- HEMACANDRA Yogasāstra MS No 1315 of 1886-1892 B O R I L, Poona
- HEMACANDRA Yogasāstra, with Commentary Bhavanagar, 1926
- HEMACANDRA Prākṛt Vyākaranam (Ed Kripachandraji) Surat, 1919
- HEMAVIJAYAGANI Pārsvanāthacaritram Benares, 1916
- HIRALAL, RAI BAHADUR Catalogue of Sanskrit and Prakrit MSS in the Central Provinces and Berar Nagpur, 1926
- HOERNLE, RUDOLF A F Uvāsaga-Dasāo, 1, 11 Calcutta, 1888, 1890
- HOERNLE, RUDOLF A F Three Further Pattāvalis of the Digambaras I A, xxi, 1892, pp 37 ff
- HOERNLE, RUDOLF A F Two Pattāvalis of the Sarasvatī-Gaccha of the Digambara Jainas I A, xx, 1891, pp 341 ff
- JACOBI, HERMANN Sthavirāvali Carita or Parīśiṣṭaparvan of Hemacandra Calcutta, 1891
- JACOBI, HERMANN Samarāṅga Kahā of Haribhadra Calcutta, 1926

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- JACOBI, HERMANN Kalpa-Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu Leipzig, 1879
- JACOBI, HERMANN The Ācārāṅga-Sūtra and the Kalpa-Sūtra. S B E, xxii, 1884
- JACOBI, HERMANN The Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra and the Sūtrakṛtāṅga Sūtra S B E, xlv, 1895
- JACOBI, HERMANN Das Kālkācārya-Kathānakam Z D M G, xxxiv, 1880, pp 247 ff
- JAIN, BANARSI DAS Jaina Jātakas Lahore, 1925
- JAINI, J L Tattvārthādhigama-Sūtra of Umāswāmi S B J, ii, 1920
- JARRETT, H S The Āin-i-Akbarī of Abul Fazl Calcutta, 1891
- JAYASIMHASŪRI Kumārāpāla-Bhūpāla-Caritra-Mahākāvya Bombay, 1926
- JHAVERI, MOHANLAL B Nirvāna-Kalkā of Pādaliptācārya Bombay, 1926
- JINABHADRAĠANI Viśeṣhāvaśyakabhāṣhya Benares, 1918
- JOLLY, J Arthaśāstra of Kautilya Lahore, 1923
- KERN, H Brahat-Samhitā of Varāhamihira Calcutta, 1865
- KERN, H The Brahat-Samhitā, or Complete System of Natural Astrology of Varāhamihira J R A S, vi (New Series), pp. 36 ff, 279 ff
- LAXMI-VALLABHA Uttarādhyayana-Dīpikā (Ed Rai Dhanapatisimha) Calcutta, 1880
- MALAYAGIRI, ĀCĀRYA Rājaprasnīya Upāṅga (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1925
- MERUTUNGA Vicāraśreni MS No 378 of 1871-1872 B O R I L, Poona
- MERUTUNGA Vicāraśreni J S S, ii, 1903-1925, Appendix
- MEYER, JOHN JACOB Hindu Tales London, 1909
- MOTILAL LADHAJI Syādvādamāñjari of Hemacandra Poona, 1926.
- MOTILAL LADHAJI Tattvārthādhigama-Sūtra of Umāsvātivācaka (Sabhāṣhya) Poona, 1927
- MUNIBHADRASŪRI Sāntinātha Mahākāvya Benares, 1911
- PANSIKAR, SASTRI Brahma-sūtra-Bhāṣhya (2nd ed) Bombay, 1927.
- PENZER, N M Tawney's Somadeva's Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara, i. London 1924
- PETERSON, P Report of Operations in search of Sanskrit MSS in the Bombay Circle, iv (1886-1892) London, 1894
- PREMI, NATHURAM Darśanasāra of Devasena Bombay, 1918
- PREMI, NATHURAM Vidvadratnamālā, i Bombay, 1912
- RHYS DAVIDS, T W Buddhist Suttas S B E, xi, 1881
- RHYS DAVIDS, T W Dialogues of the Buddha, i, S B B, ii, 1899, and ii, S B B, iii, 1910
- RHYS DAVIDS, T W and RHYS DAVIDS, C A F Dialogues of the Buddha, iii, S B B, iv, 1921

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- RHYS DAVIDS, T W and OLDENBERG, HERMANN Vinaya Texts, 1, S B E, xiii, 1881, and iii, S B E, xx, 1885
- RHYS DAVIDS, MRS The Book of Kindred Sayings, i London, 1917
- ŚĀKTĀYANACĀRYA Strimukti-Kevalibhukti J S S, ii, 1923-1925, Appendix II
- SĀNTYĀCĀRYA Uttarādhyaṇa-Sūtrahitā Bombay, 1916
- SILĀṆKĀCĀRYA Ācārāṅga-Sūtra of Sudharma (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1916
- SILĀṆKĀCĀRYA Sūtrakṛtāṅga of Sudharma (Āgamodaya Samiti) Bombay, 1917.
- SONI, PANNALAL Bhavasamgrahadh (Manikchandra Digambara Jaina Grantha Mālā) Bombay, Samvat
- STEVENSON, THE REVEREND J The Kalpa-Sūtra and Nava Tattva. London, 1848
- SUKHLAL, SANGHVI, and BICHARDAS, DOSHI Sammatutarka of Siddhasena, iii Ahmedabad, 1928
- TAWNEY, C H Merutunga's Prabandhacintāmanī Calcutta, 1901
- TAWNEY, C H The Kathākośa London, 1895
- TELANG, KASHINATH TRIMBAK The Bhagavadgītā with the Sanat-sugatīya and the Anugītā S B E, viii, 1882
- VAIDYA, P L Suyagadam Poona, 1928
- VIDYABHUSANA, SAILI CHANDRA Nyāyāvatāra of Siddhasena Dhvākara Arrah, 1915
- VINAYACANDRASŪRI Mallinātha Caritram Benares, 1912
- VINAYAVIJAYAGANI Kalpa-Sūtra, Subodhikā-Tīkā (Devchand Lalbhai) Bombay, 1923
- WARREN, HENRY CLARKE Buddhism in Translations H O S, iii, Cambridge, 1909
- WEBER, A Fragment der Bhagavatī Berlin, 1866
- WILSON, H H Vishnu-Purāna London, 1840

III Travels, etc

- BEAL, SAMUEL Si-Yu-Ki, i, ii London, 1906
- BEAL, SAMUEL The Life of Hsuen-Tsiang (Popular Ed) London, 1914
- MCCRINDLE, J W Ancient India as described by Megasthenes and Arrian London, 1877
- MCCRINDLE, J W Invasion of India by Alexander the Great. Westminster, 1893
- SACHAU, EDWARD G Alberuni's India, i, ii London, 1910
- WATERS, THOMAS On Yuan Chwang's Travels in India, ii London, 1905

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

LITERATURE

I Works

- ACHARYA, PRASANNA KUMAR Indian Architecture according to Mānasāra-Śilpaśāstra Oxford, 1927
- AIYANGAR, KRISHNASWAMI Some Contributions of South India to Indian Culture Calcutta, 1923
- AIYANGAR, RAMASWAMI, and RAO, SESHAGIRI Studies in South
Indian Jainism Madras, 1922
- BARNETT, LIONEL D Antiquities of India London, 1913
- BARODIA, U D History and Literature of Jainism Bombay, 1909
- BARTH, A The Religions of India London, 1882
- BELVALKAR, S K, and RANADE, R D History of Indian Philosophy, 11 Poona, 1927
- BENI PRASAD The State in Ancient India Allahabad, 1928
- BHANDARKAR, R G A Peep into the Early History of India
Bombay, 1920
- BIRD, JAMES Historical Researches Bombay, 1847
- BROWN, PERCY Indian Painting (Heritage of India Series)
Calcutta
- BUHLER, G On the Origin of the Indian Brahma Alphabet
Strassburg, 1898
- BUHLER, G The Indian Sect of the Jainas London, 1903
- BUHLER, G Uber das Leben des Jaina-Monches Hemacandra
Wien, 1889
- BUHLER, G Indian Studies No III Wien, 1895
- COOMARASWAMY, ANANDA K The Arts and Crafts of India and Ceylon London, 1913
- COOMARASWAMY, ANANDA K History of India and Indonesian Art.
London, 1927
- COUSENS, HENRY The Architectural Antiquities of Western India
London, 1926
- CUNNINGHAM Ancient Geography of India (Ed Mazumdar)
Calcutta, 1924
- DASGUPTA, SURENDRANATH A History of Indian Philosophy, 1.
Cambridge, 1922
- DEY, NANDO LAL The Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Mediæval India London, 1927
- DUBREUIL, G JOUVEAU Ancient History of the Deccan Pondicherry, 1920
- DUTT, R C Ancient India Calcutta, 1890
- ELLIOT, Charles Hinduism and Buddhism, 1 London, 1921
- FARQUHAR, J N An Outline of the Religious Literature of India
Oxford, 1920.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- FERGUSSON, JAMES. History of Indian and Eastern Architecture, 1, II London, 1910
- FERGUSSON, JAMES. Tree and Serpent Worship London, 1868.
- FERGUSSON, JAMES, and BURGESS, JAMES. The Cave Temples of India London, 1880
- FRAZER, R. W. A Literary History of India. London, 1920
- GANGULY, MANO MOHAN. Orissa and her Remains—Ancient and Mediæval Calcutta, 1912
- GLASENAPP, HELMUTH V. Der Jainismus Berlin, 1925
- GUÉRINOT, A. La Religion Djaina Paris, 1926
- HAVELL, E. B. The Ancient and Mediæval Architecture of India London, 1915
- HERTZL, J. On the Literature of the Śvetāmbaras of Gujarat Leipzig, 1922
- HIRALAL, H. Ancient History of the Jaina Religion, II Jamanagar, 1902
- HOPKINS, E. W. The Religions of India London, 1910
- JAINI, JAGMANDARLAL. Outlines of Jainism Cambridge, 1916.
- KANNOOMAL, LALA. The Saptabhangi Naya Agra, 1917
- KERN, H. Manual of Indian Buddhism Encyclopædia of Indo-Aryan Research, pp 1 ff
- KUNTE, N. M. The Vicissitude of Aryan Civilisation in India Bombay, 1880
- LATHE, A. B. Introduction to Jainism Bombay, 1905
- LAW, BIMALA CHARAN. Some Ksatīya Tribes of Ancient India Calcutta, 1924
- LAW, BIMALA CHARAN. The Life and Work of Buddhaghosha Calcutta and Simla, 1923
- LAW, NARENDRA NATH. Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity Oxford, 1921
- LILLY, W. S. India and its Problems London, 1902
- MACAULIFFE, MAX ARTHUR. The Sikh Religion, v Oxford, 1909
- MACDONELL, A. A. India's Past Oxford, 1927
- MACPHAIL, JAMES M. Aśoka (The Heritage of India Series) Calcutta
- MAZUMDAR, AKSHOY KUMAR. The Hindu History Calcutta, 1920
- MEHTA, N. C. Studies in Indian Painting Bombay, 1926
- MITRA, RAJENDRALAL. The Antiquities of Orissa, I, II. Calcutta, 1880
- MITRA, RAJENDRALAL. The Sanskrit Buddhist Literature of Nepal Calcutta, 1882
- MONAHAN, F. J. The Early History of Bengal Oxford, 1925
- MOOKERJEE, RADHAKUMUD. Aśoka (Gaekwad Lectures) London, 1928
- MOOKERJEE, RADHAKUMUD. Harsha Oxford, 1926

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- NARIMAN, G K Literary History of Sanskrit Buddhism (2nd ed )
Bombay, 1923
- OJHA, PANDIT G H The History of Rajputana, 1 Ajmer, 1916
- OJHA, PANDIT G H The Palæography of India Ajmer, 1918.
- O'MALLEY, L S S Bengal District Gazetteers, Puri Calcutta, 1908
- O'MALLEY, L S S Bihar and Orissa District Gazetteers, Patna
Patna 1924
- PARGIER, F E The Purāna Text of the Dynasties of the Kali Age
Oxford, 1913
- PARGITER, F E Ancient Indian Historical Tradition London, 1922
- POUSSIN, L DE LA VALLÉE The Way to Nirvāna Cambridge, 1917
- PRADHAN, SITA NATH Chronology of Ancient India Calcutta, 1927
- RADHAKRISHNAN, S Indian Philosophy, 1 London, 1923
- RALSTON, W R S Schiefner's Tibetan Tales London, 1882
- RAO, GOPINATHA T A Elements of Hindu Iconography, 1, pt 1
Madras, 1914
- RAWLINSON, GEORGE Parthia (The Story of the Nations ) London, 1893
- RAYCHAUDHURI, HELMACHANDRA Political History of Ancient India (2nd ed ) Calcutta, 1927
- RHYE, DAVIDS, T W Buddhist India (5th ed ) London, 1917
- RICE, E P Kanarese Literature (The Heritage of India Series, 2nd ed ) Calcutta, 1921
- RICE, LEWIS B Mysore and Coorg from the Inscriptions London, 1909
- ROCKHILL, W WOODVILLE The Life of the Buddha London, 1884
- SAMADDAR, J N The Glories of Magadha Patna, 1927
- SCHIEFNER, ANTON Tāranātha's Geschichte - Buddhismus St
Petersburg, 1869
- SMITH, VINCENT A The Oxford History of India Oxford, 1925
- SMITH, VINCENT A The Early History of India Oxford (1st ed ), 1904, (3rd ed ), 1914, (4th ed ), 1924
- SMITH, VINCENT A Asoka Oxford (1st ed ), 1901, (3rd ed ), 1919
- SMITH, VINCENT A A History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon
Oxford, 1911
- SOLOMON, GLADSTONE W E The Charm of Indian Art London, 1926
- SRINIVASACHARI, C S, and AYYANGAR, N S RAMASWAMY A History of India, 1 Madras, 1927

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- STEVENSON, MRS SINCLAIR The Heart of Jainism. Oxford, 1915.
- THOMAS, EDWARD Jainism, or the Early Faith of Aśoka London, 1877.
- TIELE, C P. Outlines of the History of Religion. (3rd ed.) London, 1884
- TOD, COLONEL JAMES Travels in Western India. London, 1839.
- VAIDYA, C. V History of Mediæval Hindu India, iii Poona, 1926
- VIDYABHUSANA, SATIS CHANDRA. History of Indian Logic Calcutta, 1921
- VIDYABHUSANA, SATIS CHANDRA History of Mediæval School of Indian Logic Calcutta, 1909.
- VIJAYA RĀJENDRA SŪRI Abhidhānarājendra, ii Rutlam, 1910
- WARREN, HERBERT Jainism (2nd ed.) Arrah, 1916
- WILBFORCE-BELL, CAPTAIN H. The History of Kathiawad London, 1926
- WILSON, H. H His Works, i. London, 1862
- WINTERNITZ, M Geschichte der Indischen Litteratur, ii. Leipzig, 1920

II Articles

- ANDREWS, F N Introduction The Influences of Indian Art. The India Society, London, 1925
- BAKHLE, V S Sātavāhanas and the Contemporary Ksatrapas J B B R A S (New Series), iii., 1928, pp 44 ff
- BARNETT, L D. The Early History of Southern India, ch. xxiv. CHI, i, 1922, pp 593 ff
- BARUA, BENIMADHAV The Ājivikas J D L, ii, 1920, pp 1 ff
- BILAGWANLAL INDRAJI, PANDIT Some Considerations of the History of Bengal I A, xiii, 1884, pp 411 ff
- BUHLER, G Pushpamitra or Pushyamitra? I A., ii, 1874, pp. 363 ff
- BUHLER, G The Digambara Jainas I A, vii, 1878, pp 28 ff
- BURGESS, J Papers on Satruñjaya and the Jainas I A, ii, 1874, pp. 14 ff, 134 ff., xiii, 1884, pp 191 ff, 276 ff
- CHARPENTIER, JARL The History of the Jainas, ch. vi CHI, i, 1922, pp 150 ff
- CHARPENTIER, JARL The Date of Mahāvīra. I A, xliii., 1914, pp 118 ff, 125 ff, 167 ff
- COLEBROOKE, H T Observations on the Sect of Jainas Miscellaneous Essays, ii., Madras, 1872, pp. 191 ff.
- COLEBROOKE, H T On the Philosophy of the Hindus Miscellaneous Essays, i, Madras, 1872, pp. 227 ff.
- CROOKE, W Bengal E R E, ii, 1909, pp 479 ff

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- DEY, NANDO LAL. Notes on Ancient Anga or the District of Bhagalpur JASB (New Series), x, 1914, 1918, pp 317 ff
- FLEET, J F. Nisidhi and Gudda IA, xii, 1883, pp 99 ff
- FLEET, J F. Bhadrabāhu, Candragupta, and Sravana-Belgola IA, xxi, 1892, pp 156 ff
- FLEET, J F. Dimensions of Indian Cities and Countries JRAS, 1907, pp 641 ff.
- FLEET, J F. Notices of Books. Archaeological Survey of India—Annual Report for 1905–1906 JRAS, 1910, pp. 240 ff.
- HERAS, REV H. Aśoka's Dharma and Religion QJMS, xvii, 1926–1927, pp 255 ff
- HERMANN OLDENBERG. Jacobi's Kalpa-Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu ZDMG, xxxiv, 1880, pp 748 ff
- HOERNLE, RUDOLF A F. Ājīvikas ERE, i, 1908, pp 259 ff
- JACOBI, HERMANN. On Mahāvira and his Predecessors IA, ix, 1880, pp. 158 ff
- JACOBI, HERMANN. The Dates of the Philosophical Sūtras of the Brahmins JAS, xxxi, 1909–1910, pp 1 ff
- JACOBI, HERMANN. Atomic Theory (Indian) ERE, ii, 1909, pp. 199 ff
- JACOBI, HERMANN. Ueber die Entstehung der Svetāmbara und Digambara Sekten ZDMG, xxxviii, 1884, pp 1 ff
- JAYASWAL, K P. The Saisunāka and Maury Chronology and the Date of the Buddha's Nirvāna JBORS, i, 1915, pp 67 ff
- JAYASWAL, K P. The Empire of Bindusāra JBORS, ii, 1916, pp 79 ff
- JAYASWAL, K P. Demetrios, Khāravela and the Garga-Samhitā JBORS, xiv, 1928, pp 127 ff
- JINAVIJAYA, MUNI. Kuvalayamālā JSS, iii, pp 169 ff
- KAMTA PRASAD JAIN. The Jaina References in the Buddhist Literature IHQ, ii, 1926, pp 698 ff
- KETKAR, S V. Jainism ME, xiv, Poona, 1925, pp 319 ff
- KLATT, JOHANNES. Extracts from the Historical Records of the Jainas IA, xi, 1882, pp 245 ff
- LASSEN. Papers on Śātrūṅjaya and the Jainas IA, ii, 1874 pp. 193 ff, 258 ff
- LEUMANN, E. Beziehungen der Jaina—Literatur Zu Andern Literaturkreisen Indiens. Actes du Sixième Congrès, Troisième Partie, Section 2, Aryenne, Leide, 1885, pp 467 ff
- LONG, REV J. Notes and Queries suggested by a Visit to Orissa in January 1859 JASB, xxviii, 1859, pp 185 ff
- MACDONALD, GEORGE. The Hellenic Kingdoms of Syria, Bactria and Parthia, ch xvii CHI, i, 1922, pp 427 ff
- MARSHALL, J. H. The Monuments of Ancient India, ch xxvi CHI, i, 1922, pp 612 ff

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- MEYER, EDUARD Demetrius EB, vii (11th ed.), 1910, pp 982 ff
- MEYER, EDUARD. Eucratides EB, ix (11th ed.), 1910, pp 880 ff
- MOOKERJI, ASHUTOSH Historical Research in Bihar and Orissa
JBORS, x, 1924, pp 1 ff
- PARGITER, F E Ancient Indian Genealogies and Chronology
JRAS, 1910, pp 1 ff.
- PATHAK, K B The Date of Mahāvira's Nirvāna as determined in Saka 1175 IA, xii, 1883, pp 21 ff
- RAPSON, E J The Scythian and Parthian Invaders, ch xxiii
CHI, 1, 1922, pp 563 ff
- RAPSON, E J Indian Native States after the Period of the Maurya
Empire, ch xxi CHI, 1, 1922, pp 514 ff
- RAPSON, E J The Purāṇas, ch xiii CHI, 1, 1922, pp 296 ff
- RAPSON, E J A Peoples and Languages, B Sources of History, ch ii CHI, 1, 1922, pp 37 ff
- RHYS DAVIDS, T W The Early History of the Buddhists, ch
vii CHI, 1, 1922, pp 171 ff
- RICE, LEWIS Bhadrabāhu and Sravana Belgola IA, iii, 1874,
pp 153 ff
- ROTHENSTEIN, WILLIAM Introduction. Examples of Indian Sculpture in the British Museum, pp 7 ff The India
Society, London, 1923
- SASTRI, BANERJI A The Ājivikas JBORS, xii, 1926, pp 53 ff
- SASTRI, HARAPRASAD Causes of the Dismemberment of the Maurya
Empire JASB, vi, 1910, pp 259 ff
- SHAH, C J The A B C of Jainism JG, xxiii, 1927, pp 103 ff, 133 ff, 185 ff, 212 ff
- SMITH, VINCENT A New Light on Ancient India. JRAS, 1918,
pp 543 ff
- SMITH, VINCENT A Revised Chronology of the Early or Imperial Gupta Dynasty IA, xxxi, 1902, pp 257 ff
- STERLING, A An Account, Geographical, Statistical and Historical, of Orissa proper, or Cuttack AR, xvii, 1825, pp 163 ff.
- SUBRAHMANYAN, K R The Early Religious History of Kalinga
AHRS., 1, 1926, pp 49 ff
- THIBAUT, G On the Sūryaprajñapti JASB, xlix, pt 1, 1880,
pp 107 ff
- THOMAS, EDWARD Jainism IA, viii, 1879, pp 30 ff
- THOMAS, F W Political and Social Organisation of the Maurya
Empire, ch. xix CHI, 1, 1922, pp. 474 ff
- THOMAS, F W Candragupta, the Founder of the Maurya Empire, ch xviii CHI, 1, 1922, pp. 467 ff
- TURNOUR, GEORGE An Examination of the Pāli Buddhistical
Annals, No 5 JASB, vii, 1888, pp 991 ff

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- VIJAYADHARMASŪRI Jainatattvajñāna. Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, Poona, 1917, pp 189 ff
- WEBER. The Sacred Literature of the Jainas. IA, xvii., 1888, pp 279 ff., 389 ff., xviii, 1889, pp 181 ff., 369 ff ; xix, 1890, pp 62 ff ; xx, 1891, pp 18 ff., 170 ff, 365 ff ; xxi, 1892, pp 14 ff, 106 ff, 177 ff, 210 ff, 293 ff, 327 ff, 369 ff
- WILFORD, CAPTAIN. Of the Kings of Magadha their Chronology. A.R, ix, 1819, pp 82 ff
- WILSON, H. H. An Essay on the Hindu History of Cashmir A R, xv, 1825, pp 1 ff

INDEX

Abhayadevasūri, 89, 102, 227n
 Abhayakumāra, 47, 118n
Abhidhānacintāmaṇi, 3n
Abhidhāna-Ratnamālā, 67
 Abhi, 92
 Abhinandana, 2n
 Ābhīras, 204n
Abhisheka, 28
Abrahma-carya-vāsa, 63
 Abu, 247
 Abu-l-Fazl, 140
Ārddhaṅga-Sūtra, 10, 86, 220, 225, 226, 286
Ārāya 244
 Acha, 110n
Adharma 38, 230
Adhikāra, 1
Ādikartris See Tirthankaras
 Ādinātha, 153 209
 Advaitins, 55
Āgamu, literature, 10, 227, 241
Aggeniya or Aggāniya (? Agrāyāniya), 219
 Agni-Mitra, 162
 Agrammes, 126, 127, 132
 Ahicchatra or Chatravatī, 81, 213
Ahimsā, 1, 7 43, 46, 47, 49-51, 53, 57, 200
 Aikshvākas, 8<sup>r</sup>
Aīd, 164
Āin-i Akbarī, 140
Aira, 164
 Arvāgar, K., 169n
 Ajātasatru, 19, 29, 32, 34, 64, 86, 88n, 94, 95, 100, 101, 109, 118-115, 117-123, 176n, 291, 238
 Ajātasattū See Ajātasatru
 Ajita, 2n
Ajiva, 86, 39, 53
*Ājīvika*s, 58, 59, 61-67, 71, 142-144
Ājivikehi, 66
Ājivīya, 229
Ājñānavāda, 56, 226
Ākāśa, 38
 Akbar, 140
Akriyavāda, 56, 226
 Alakkhe, 92 109
 Alberuni, 83, 89, 169, 207
 Alexander, 4, 80, 125, 127, 193
 Amalakappa, 231
 Amarāvati, 257
 Ammarāja II, 181

Āmohinī, 196, 255, 256
 Anahilapattana See Pattana
 Ānanda, 100, 106, 108
 Ānandapura, 216n
 Ananta, 2n
Ananta-Darśana, 99
 Anantagumpha, 150, 151
Ananta-Jñāna, 89
Ananta-Sukha, 39
Ananta-Vīrya, 89, 41
 Ānarta, 90n
Anāsana, 44
Anala, 76n
 Āndhra 166, 168, dynasty, 149, 164, inscriptions, 202, king, 163
 Āndhras, 145, 154, 157, 159, 166-168, 174, 180, 204n
 Andrews, 254
Anekāntavāda, 53
 Anga, 26, 27n, 94 96-99, 110n, 118, 115, 146, 172
Anga (literature), 59, 96, 100, 108, 226
 Angāravati, 98
Angas, 10 38, 60n, 100n, 150, 183, 184n, 220-223, 225, 227 233, 235, 238
Anga Saptika, 163
Anguttara Nikāya, 81, 110n, 142, 227
 Aniruddha, 124
Antya vāda, 55
 Anojā, 24
Anagada-Dasāo, 92, 94, 106, 109, 119n, 220
Antarāya Karma, 40n
 Antiochos soter, 138
Anu, 38n
Anullatovavādyavadasāo (Anullatavapad-tikadasāh), 220
Anuyodhārasutta (Anuyogadārasūtra), 221, 236
Anuyogas, 226
Apabhramśa Prākṛt, 159
 Apāpapurī See Pāpā or Pāvā
Āpa-Rāja, 172
Aparigraha, 7, 44
 Apsaras, 252
 Ara, 2n
 Arbuda Jina, 173
Artha Māgadhi, 159, 237, 243
Arthaphalaka, 68
 Ārdraka, 62
 Arhadbab, 181

INDEX

Arhat Jñātriputra See Mahāvīra
 Arhats, 1 2 4 20, 26, 72 73 91 117,
 156 159, 164, 178, 182-184, 200 209,
 226 233, 255, 257
 Ariāna, 134
 Arishtanemi See Nemi
 Ārsham, 237
 Arthasāstra, 132n, 138n
 Āryā, 223, 233
 Ārya Khaputa, 189
 Ārya Mahāgiri, 60n, 116, 240n
 Āryan clans, 104 culture, 14, settlements 15n
 Āryans, 14, 50, 170, 211
 Ārya Samgha, 152
 Ārya suhastin 69n
 Ārya-sangamukā, 200
 Ārya vasulā 200
 Āśltha, 58
 Ā sat, 58
 Aśta Mūrti, 244
 Ashvaghosha 6n
 Asoka 5, 30 65, 111, 113, 127 131n 134,
 138-144 148 148-150, 159 160n, 165,
 166 171 173 176 205, 237 Brāhmī,
 60n, Devanāgarī 66 edicts, 161,
 202 inscriptions 66, trees 120
 Asokacandra, 120
 Āsraṇa, 39, 40
 Assakī, 110n
 Asteya, 7 43
 Asthikagrāma, 26n
 Asti 55
 Avamedha 16n, 162
 Asvamedha, 54
 Asvasena, 13 79, 81, 82n
 Atitha samibhāga vrata, 142
 Ātmā, 42
 Ātman, 55
 Ātma vāda, 55
 Ātmaśūla 85
 Atthinnathippavāya (Astinnastipravāda), 219
 Āupapāṅka, 119n, 121, 220, 231
 Āturapaccakkhāna (Āturapratyākhyāna),
 220
 Avadānasataka, 230
 Avadhi-Jāna, 43n
 Avaha, 110n
 Avakāya, 55
 Avamyha (Avandhya), 219
 Avanti, 28 90, 91, 96-99 110n, 113, 115,
 116, 192, Dakṣiṇāpatha, 97n, Prad-
 vyota See Candā Pradyota
 Āvanyaka Sūtra, 52, 93, 122 221, 235, 238
 Āvanyakas 235
 Āyāgapataś 254 257, 260
 Āyappavāya (Āmapravāda), 219
 Āyāradaśūo (Ācāradaśūh) or Desāsuyas- khandha (Dasavrutaskhandha), 221, 244, 238

Ayodhya, 83n, 109, 127, inscriptions, 162
Āyush Karma, 40n
 Āyva Sāma See Śyāmārya
 Azcs, 196

Bactra 163, 193, 194
 Badami 153n
 Bahapati or Bahasati-mitra See Pushyamitra
 Bāhilkas, 204n
 Bahula, 240n
 Baibhāra-giri, 111
 Bikhle, 167
 Balabhadra, 30
 Balamiti 28 176n
 Balisaha, 240n
 Binabhatta, 174, 214
 Binārāja 90n
 Banarasi Das Jain, 238
Bandha 39 40
 Banerji, R D, 31, 128, 156, 157, 160n,
 162, 198n
 Banerji Sastri, 66
 Banga 110n
 Baniā, 103n
 Barābar, 65, 66, 113, 148, 170, 177
 Bārabbaji 152
 Bāvaśi, 108
 Barnett, 92 100, 166, 251
 Barua 61 63
 Bauddha hermits, 151, symbols, 152n
 Bauddhas, 51, 98, 182, 229, 257, sculptures of, 247
 Bāwā Pyārū's Math, 247
 Beal, 51n
 Belgola See Śrāvana Belgola
 Belvalkar, 11, 56
 Benares, 13, 22, 79
 Bhuddā, 58n
Bhūdrabdhavī-Samhitā, 239
 Bhadrabāhu, 5, 10, 30, 32n, 56, 68, 70, 71,
 73, 78, 130n, 135, 137, 181 184, 221, 233,
 234, 238-240, 242
Bhadrabāhu-carita, 181, 182
Bhādrapada, 189
Bhāgavata-Purana, 8, 83n
Bhagavatas, 226
Bhagavati-Sūtra, 10, 57, 59, 62, 64, 81,
 89, 96, 102, 110n, 113n, 119n, 220, 228
 Bhāgrathi 81
 Bhagwanlal Indrajī, 160n, 202
Bhāndāra, 210n
 Bhāndarkar, 97n, 202
 Bhandin, 214n
 Bhānugupta, 211
 Bhānumati, 28, 176n
 Bharata, 8
 Bharata (Khandā), 145n
Bhāratavarsha, 90, 91, 171, 232
 Bharhut Stūpa, 256

INDEX

Bhāsa, 96, 122, 160n
Bhāṣya, 240
 Bhatīrka, 215, 216
Bhāṭṭapariṇā (Bhaktapariṇā), 220
 Bhāṭṭāraka Ratnanandi, 68
 Bhāṭṭibhava, 206
Bhāva, 54
 Bhāvada, 190
 Bhāvadeva Sūri, 155
Bhāvanādhīpatis, 252
 Bhavāni Dādu, 158
Bhāvasamgraha, 68
Bheda, 171
Bhikṣugrhas, 249
Bhikṣurāja See Khāravala
 Bhīlāmīla, 76n
 Bhogas, 85, 108
 Bhojikas, 167, 168
Bhūlavasa, 150, 154, 159
Bhūlavasa, 176
 Bimbisāra or Srenika, 10, 24, 32, 47, 64, 83n, 88, 93n, 95, 96, 98, 101, 110, 112-114, 116, 120, 122n, 136, 146, 176n
 Bimbisārapurī, 111n
Bindusāra, 52
 Bindusāra (king), 65n, 132, 134, 138, 139
 Bīpūlagiri, 111
Brada, 6
 Bithoor, 12
 Bloch, 219
 Bodhisattva, 249
 Bogrā, 83n
 Bo tree, 150
Brahmacarya, 7, 44
Brahmadāsika, 202
 Brāhmadatta, 82
 Brahman, 20n, 99, 138n, 167, 173, caste, 103n, fold, 38, friend, 25, lady, 21, record, 81n, reaction, 76n, statesman, 104
Brahmana literature, 18
Brāhmana-Sūtrā āra, 14
Brahmanas, 15n, 16
Brāhmanī, 28
 Brahmanic, ascetics, 92, penance, 19
 Brahmanical, humilics, 20n, revival, 77, sacrifice, 7, works, 144
 Brahmanism, 2, 15, 17, 20, 129n, 139, 149, 158, 171, 173
 Brahmins, 6n, 8, 14-17, 19, 22, 23, 50, 65, 77, 82, 131, 132, 136, 137n, 139-148, 165, 170, 171, 174-176, 224, 237
Brahmarshadisa, 15n
Brahma Sūtra, 9
 Brāhmi, inscription, 148, hpi, 66, records, 109
 Brāhadratha, 134, 170, 174, 177
 Brhaspati-Mitra See Pushyamitra
Brhatkalpa, 221
Brhat-Kathā-Kosa, 135

Brhat-Samhitā, 5n, 78
 Buddha, 1, 4, 6-8, 11, 17, 18, 20, 22, 24, 29, 32, 42, 47n, 58, 59, 62, 80, 88n, 96, 101, 107n, 108, 111n, 119, 121, 181n, 140, 144, 177, 208, 227, 248, 253, Nirvana of, 27, 30n, 81
 Buddhaghosha, 222
 Buddhahood, 29
 Buddhism, 2, 11, 17, 18, 56, 64n, 76, 77, 80, 102, 129n, 140, 141, 149, 154, 157, 158, 170, 178, 205, 215, 217, 248, 261
 Buddhist, annals, 80, 144, art, 251, books, 197, 118, canon, 5-8, 13, 104, cave, 155, council, 221, evidence, 122, -Granthas, 7, influences, 151, inscription, 157, legends, 151, 228, 240, lists, 98, 109, literature, 81, 97, 226, monks, 142, 238, monuments, 259, order, 77n, revolution, 17, rulers, 65, scriptures, 59, sculptures, 195, 257, 258, sources, 61, 85, 121, texts, 112, 227, tradition, 34, 81, 88n, 90n, 102, 110, 123, 124, works, 99, world, 173, writers, 111n
 Buddhists or Buddhas, 5-8, 19, 22, 42, 46, 54, 58, 60, 65, 66, 70n, 76, 78, 80, 82, 84, 99, 102n, 105, 107, 109n, 116, 119, 120, 122-124, 129, 141, 143, 175, 176, 189, 201n, 243, 235, 248n, 249, 251, 252
 Buhler, 6, 11, 21, 26n, 41, 180n, 174n, 191, 192, 195, 197, 199, 202, 205, 206, 208, 214, 247n, 254, 256-258, 260
 Burgess, 156, 160n
 Burmese traditions, 33n
 Cātyas, 182, 249
Cakra, 111, 180n, 257
 Campā, 26, 86, 98, 95, 113, 120, 122, 123, 231
Compaka-Sreshthi-Kathā, 95
 Canaka, 132n
 Cānakya, 130-134, 137, 139
Cāndāla (Śvapāka), 20, 50
 Candanā or Candrabālā, 93, 94
Cāndapannath (Cāndrapannath), 220
 Candia Pradyota, 91, 93, 96-98, 113, 115, 116
 Canda, Ramaprasad, 128, 160n
Cāndāvijhanya (Cāndravedhyaka), 220
 Candrabhāgā, 210, 212
 Candragupta I, 28, 30-32, 34, 38, 68, 70, 126, 127, 130, 140, 143, 147, 159, 174, 176, 178n, 181, 183, 184, 193, 221
 Candragupta II, 206, 207
 Candragupta II (Candragupta Vikramāditya), 205, 208
 Candrakākhā, 68
 Candraprabha, 2n, 26n, 109
Cāndraprajñapti, 232
 Candrapura or Candrikāpurī, 26n, 109

INDEX

anesvari, 181
 anin, 181
 araka, 181
aranyakavana 226
āritra, 43, 52
āritras, 3 ārīvāka, 36
āturmukha 195
Āturvārta Samgha, 201
Āturvāda-Samgha, 45
Āturyāma-Dharma 7, 10, 18
ausarāna (Catukṣarāna), 220
Avatsattho 235n
 Cedi, 164, 193
 Ceitya (Cedi), 110n king, 147 161
   dynasty, 149 164
 Ceitya, 100, 105, 106
 cellanā, 64, 88 89, 98, 110 117, 118, 120
 Ctaka (Cedaga), 64 80, 88 89 91 92
   94-96, 98-101 109, 117, 122, 231
 Chakravarti, Mon Mohan 73 249 250
Chakravartin 112
 Chalne 58
 Chālukya 181
 Charpentier, Jurl. 9, 11 28-30 33 37 77,
   128-130, 188, 192 216 210 221 224,
   225, 231, 232n 234 236
 Chaurāsī mounds, 195n
 Chavilīkāra 140
cheduśāstras 221 231, 234
 China 76
 Chinese Turkestan 194
 Chitor 247
 Christians, 51n
 Citra 82
 Colebrook 11
 Colridge 57
 Coomaraswamy, 249 256n
 Cowell and Thomas, 174n
 Culanī, 82
 Cunda, 107n 108
 Cunningham 29, 85, 89 107n, 160n 194,
   196 201 202, 212n, 213 259 260
 Curtius 126, 127

 Dadhivāhana, 98, 99, 122
Dāgoba, 248
Dakṣiṇapatha, 210
Danda-Samātā, 176
 Darsaka 97, 122
Darśana, 39n, 40n, 43
Darśanaśāstra, 68
Darśanādvainīya 40n
Dasa-Kappa-Vavahāra, 238
 Daśaratha, 65, 69, 144, edicts, 164
 Daśarnabhadrā, 146
Dasaavyāliya (Dasavaliśika), 95, 221,
   235, 236n, 238
 Dasgupta 10 11, 18, 56, 74
 Datilūcāya (Dattilūcāya), 206

Deha, 180, 231
 Demetrios, 32, 161-164, 169, 170, 185,
   198, 250
Devāsuyaskhandha (Dasasrutaskhandha)
   See Āyāradasā (Ācāradasāh)
Devāgama 152
Devas, 16, 20, 73
 Devadatta, 121
 Devadattā, 23
Devādāhīda, 1
 Devagupta, 210, 213 215
Devalokas, 60n
 Devānandā, 21
 Devapāla, 189
 Devaputra Huksha (Hushka or Huvrsha) 199
 Devardhuganin, 30, 73 216, 218 222 236,
   237
Deva Samgha, 181
 Devasenavūri, 68
Devatas, 256
Devindathana (Devendrastana) 220
Devis 152
 Dev, Nundo Lal, 81 89, 103 103n
Dhammapada 141, 235
 Dhana 131n
 Dhanabhūti 256
 Dhanāvaha 94
 Dhankas 226
 Dharmasena II 216
 Dharma, 2n
Dharma 38 45 140, 141, of Mahāvīru,
   61, of Pārsva, 18, 61
 Dharmā, 65n
Dharmakāra 257
 Dharmadāsaganī 239, 240
Dharmadeśanā, 228
 Dharmaghosha 258
 Dharmakathā 226
Dharma Mahāmātra See Dharmā-Mahā-
   mātra
Dharma Mahāmātra, 142, 143, 176
Dharmarāja See Khūravāla
 Dharmaruci, 258
Dharmas 230
 Dharmasāgata 69
Dharmasāstras, 224
Dharmavijaya, 146
 Dhruv, K H, 160n
Dhruva, 53
 Dhruva, A R, 54
 Dhruvasena 30 216 222
 Dhruvasena I See Dhruvasena
 Dhulew Jina, 173
Dhundiā See Sthānakavasi
 Digambara, 51n, 69, belief, 72, division,
   78, mode, 252 Paṭāvalies, 146, school, 181, sect, 40n, 67, 75, 94, 153, 158, Svētāmbari schism, 135, tradition, 68, 69, 71, writer, 142

INDEX

- Digambaras, 70-75, 187*n*, 158*n*, 181, 182, 221-223, 239*n*-241
Dīgha Nikāya, 224
Digvijaya, 146
Dikshā, 129
Dinā (Dattā) 199
Dīpāṃśu, 235
Dīpāṃśu (Drshpāda), 220, 221*n*, 225, 227, 230, 231
Divāli (Dīpāvālī), 27*n*
Dvayādāna, 65*n*, 81, 117, 132, 173
Dramilas 145
Dravya 54, 226
Drdhavarman, 97
Dubreuil, 160*n*
Dūpalāsa, 100, 105
Duśa 103*n*
Dutt 4, 17, 18
Dvādaśāṅgī, 223
Dvasha, 52

Early History of India 32*n*
Edgerton 187, 191, 192
Ellendin 61*n*
Ekamvādaśīyam, 55
Ekavāda 55
Elliot Charles, 11, 71, 76, 78
Ellora 153*n*
Eucratides 162*n*, 163, 193
Euthydemus, 162*n*

Fergusson 156, 160*n*, 198*n*, 247, 249, 251
Fleet 135, 141, 159, 161, 168, 182, 183, 207, 212*n*
Fra Bartolommeo 248
Frazer 11

Gachas 76*n*, 189
Gādāpura 81*n*
Gajapati kings, 179*n*
Gana 135, 202
Ganadharas, 10, 22, 87, 38, 95, 111, 225, 235
Ganarājās, 80, 108, 111*n*
Gandhāra, 110*n*, 193, period, 251, school, 251, 258, 254
Gandharas, 73, 252
Gandāgumphā, 154, 155, 250
Ganga 58
Ganguly Mano Mohan, 151, 155, 161*n*
Ganita See Kāla
Ganvījā (Ganītiyā), 220
Ganjaridae 127
Gardabbilas, 204*n*
Gardabhālā, 82
Gardabhulla, 28, 188, 189, 232*n*
Gardner, 162
Gārgī Samhitā 162
Garuda, 252, 259
Gāthās, 29*n*
Gauda, 214*n*

Gautama, 83*n*
Gautama (Buddha) See Buddha
Geiger, 122
Ghaṭotkaca, 206
Ghusita(ā), 169
Girivraja-giri, 111
Girnār or Revantagiri, 190*n*, 245, 247, 248, 260
Gobahula, 58*n*
Golla district, 132*n*
Gorathagiri (Goradhagiri), 66, 66*n*, 148, 161, 163, 169, 170
Gosāla or Gosāla Mankhaliputta, 8, 58-64, 66, 71, 71*n*, 228
Gosarman 208
Goshtāmāhila or Goshtāmāhila, 58, 227*n*
Gotama See Buddha
Gotipura (Guptiputra), 197
Gotra, 20*n*, 99
Gotra Karma, 40*n*, 45*n*
Graha Kula, 152
Grahamittapālita, 206
Grahavarman 214
Greeks, 133, 135, 193
Grhyaśāstra-Āraṇya, 43
Growse, 206*n*
Guerinot, 11, 12, 245
Gumphā, 151
Guna, 58
Gupta, 206*n*, date, 208, dynasty, 204, 207, 213, 214, empire, 211, 217, era, 207, inscriptions, 200, list, 205, period, 200, 205-207, 209, 212, 215, 216, 261, seals, 259
Guptas, 205, 209, 212, 215
Guptakāla, 206, 207*n*
Guptavarsha 206
Gurus, 3, 22, 37, 68, 70, 212, 213

Hala, 189*n*
Halāyudha, 67
Halla, 118
Haraprasad Sastri, 176
Hari See Indra
Haribhadra, 22, 51, 52, 93, 122, 125, 190-235
Harigupta, 210, 212, 215
Harikesa-Bala, 20*n*, 50
Harinegamasī, 21
Harisena, 135
Harppā, 212*n*
Harsha, 169
Harshacarita 214
Harshavardhana, 174, 214
Hastipālā, 26*n*, 27, 107
Hastisāhāsa (Hastisāha), 156
Hāthigumphā, 156, 158, 168*n*, 183, 249, 250, inscription, 127, 128, 147, 148, 150, 151, 153*n*, 157, 158, 160*n*, 163-166, 185-187, 208, 251, 252

INDEX

Hellenes, 232
Hellenism, 254
Hemacandra, 3n, 5, 27n-31, 33, 34, 42, 47, 49, 50, 81, 90n, 91, 97, 98, 122, 124, 125, 136n, 137, 144, 145, 221n, 242
Hemakośa, 81
Heras, Rev., 134, 140, 141
Hertel, 228
Humavatkūta, 131, 134
Himsā, 51
Hindu, 66n, annals, 80, art, 245, Aryans, 14, 15, fold, 14, 18, gods, 252, kingdom, 13, period, 134, rule, 19, sect, 49, scriptures, 8, 9
Hinduism, 15, 44n, 154
Hindus, 14, 18, 83n, 132, 187, 205, 248, 248n, Sūtras of the, 9
Hiralal, Rai Bahadur, 240
Huen Tsiang, 51n, 181n, 149, 217
Hoernle, 64n, 76n, 77n, 100-106
Hopkins, 17
Hultsch, 66, 141, 142
Hūna, Samrāt, 213
Hūnas, 211, 216
Hūnādhipati, 211
Hushka. See Huvishka
Huvishka, 197-199, 206n
Hypanis (Bīās), 162

Ikshvāku, 20n, 79
Indo-Seythic period, 4
Indra, 21, 87, 252
Indrabhūti, 22, 37n, 181
Indriya, 52
Isamos (Yamunā), 162
Islamites, 78
Itihāsasamvāda, 228

Jābālipura, 209n
Jacobi, 6-9, 11, 12, 18, 23, 28, 30, 56, 63, 77, 78, 80, 85n, 87, 92n, 99, 105n, 132n, 133n, 137, 224, 226, 230, 234, 239
Jagannatha, temple of, 154
Jagatprabhu, 1
Jana-darīna, 2, -dharma, 2, Gurus, 22, 28, Māhārāṣṭri, 237, Mata, 40, Sādhus, 76, -āsana, 2, Sāstras, 41, Sūtras, 8, 9, 24n, 66, 87, 99, 100, 105, Yoga, 42
Jalandar, 173, 175
Jālandhar. See Jalandar
Jalmandar, 246
Jamālī, 8, 24, 58, 227n, 228
Jambū or Jambūsvāmī, 70, 94n, 95, 100, 130n, 195n, 225
Jambuddhāpannatti (Jambuddhāpaprayāṇa), 220, 232
Jambūdvīpa, 145
Jambūdvīpa-Samāsa, 240
James Bird, 73
282

Janaka, 140n
Janapada, 97n
Janasāna, 65n
Japan, 76
Jasanandi, 153
Jātakas, 81, 228
Jāvada, 190
Jaya, 112
Jayanti, 96
Jayaswal, 81-83, 128, 136, 160n-162, 164, 165, 169, 170, 174n, 177-179, 181-183, 185
Jayaviyaya, 155
Jews, 76
Jhaveri, 71n
Jina, 1, 2, 20, 32, 42, 58, 60, 62, 92, 122, 128, 172, 173, 177, 184, 205, 208, 253, 255, Deva, 46
Jinacandra, 68, 69, 73
Jinadatta, 76n
Jinahood, 62
Jina-Kalpa, 70n
Jinakalpikas, 25n
Jinaprabhasūri, 145n
Jinas, 3n, 11, 24, 37, 46, 82, 91, 94, 105, 239, 252
Jinasena, 35
Jinaviyaya, 160n, 173, 181, 209, 210, 213
Jitūdāsti, 181
Jīva, 38, 39, 41, 46, 47, 59, 180, 229, 231, 232
Jñābhūgama, 220
Jīvas (Samsārins), 39, 117
Jīyasattū (Jītasātru). See Chetaka or Chedaga
Jñāna, 39n, 40n, 43
Jñāndhvaranīya, 40n
Jñāta or Jñāta, 6
Jñātri-Kshatriyas. See Jñātrikas or Jñātris
Jñātrika, 88, clan, 105, 106
Jñātrikas or Jñātris, 6, 21, 24n, 84, 87, 104-107
Jñātriputra. See Mahāvīra
Jñātriputras. See Jñātrikas or Jñātris
Jybhikagrāma or Jybmhlā, 27, 27n
Judas Iscariot, 121
Junāgadh, 247
Jyeshthā, 89, 96
Jyotishkas, 252

Kafiristan, 193
Kahāum, inscription, 208, 209
Kakubhagrāma, 208n
Kāla, 36, 38, 54, 226
Kāla, 119
Kālakācārya or Kāhkācārya, 188, 190, 232n
Kālakācārya-Kāhānaka, 188n, 189n, 192
Kalasa, 213

INDEX

Kālasaukarika, 47, 48
 Kālāsavasiyaputta, 10
 Kālidāsa, 102
 Kalīnga, 81, 92, 113 127 129 134 146
 150, 155, 157, 159, 161, 165-168, 172,
 173, 177-179, 184, 187, 193, dynasty,
 164, edicts, 168n
Kalingādhipati, 187
 Kalingas, 134, 168
Kalpa, 233 238
 Kalpaka, 129, 130
Kalpa-Sūtra, 5 6, 10, 21 27n, 30 62,
 85n-87 95, 99, 102 103, 106n-108 111,
 142, 155 202n, 216n, 221n, 234, 239
Kalyāṇamandirastotra, 242
 Kāmandaka 182n
 Kamboja, 110n
Kammappavāḍaṇ (Karmapratāḍa), 219
 Kāmpilya 82
 Kuntā Prasad Jain, 142n
 Kanauj or Kanvīkubja, 81, 214, 243
 Kanha See Kṛṣṇa
 Kanishka 195 197-199, 204, 206n, 256
 Kanakī Tīla 195 196, 198, 203, 247, 253,
 254
 Kinnomal Lala, 57
 Kapila 51
Kappavadamvāḍa (Kalpavataṃvāḍa) 220
Karakandu, 93n
Karim Bhanle, 52
Kārikā, 243
 Karman, 20n, 50, 227
 Karinas, 6, 20n 46-42, 44-47, 49, 64 remembrance, 248
Karmavataka, 230
Kārttika, 99n
Kāśyapa, 44
 Kashmir, 140
 Kāśi, 81-83, 86, 90 100, 110n, 114 115
 Kāśi-Kosala, 80, 108, 109
Kāśyapa Gotra, 6 21
 Kāśyapa Kshatriyas, 107
Kathakōśa, 122
Kathānakas, 235
Kathā Sāhitya, 200
Kathā Sarit-Sāgara, 96n, 115, 127, 132, 167
 Kātrā, 193, 253
 Kauravas, 85
Kausagga, 235n
 Kaushāmbi, 93 98, 113, 115
 Kaushika, family, 197
 Kautilya, 123n, 132, 143, 224
Kāyā Nishādi, 182
 Kern, 81n, 66n, 141
 Kesari dynasty 154
 Kesi, 91, 92, 231
Kevāda Jñāna, 1 25, 43n, 95n
Kevāli, 1, 22
Kevāliins, 22n, 26, 27, 46, 72

Khandagiri, 73, 149 151, 158n, 154, 157-
 159, 249
Kharatara-Gaecha, 76n, 78 Patṭaṇṇi,
 180 190
 Khāravāla, 19, 32 66, 110, 127-129, 146-
 150, 153n, 156, 157 159-172, 177-180,
 182 187 193, 203, 250
Khatika, 244
 Khubir-i-Rahi, 165
 Kūpishi, 51n 217n
Kunnaras 258
 Kurātas 131n
Kuriyāvāsāla (Kuriyāvāsāla), 219
 Kūtra (Citta), 82n
 Kuttoe, 160n
 Ku-she-ki-e-la-po-lo (Kusigurapura)
 See Hājagṛha
 Klatt 180n
 Koccha (Kaccha?), 110n
 Kollāga, 104, 105
 Konka See Ajātasatru
 Konka, 8
 Konow, 160n 162, 192 196
 Kosala 27n 83n 86, 99 109, 110n 111
 115, 118, 127 167
 Kosalandra, 84n 110 118
 Kosalan war 114
 Kosalas, 14, 110, 114
 Kotigāma, 102n
Kottiya Kotika Gana, 201 202n 206
 Koundinya Gotra 24
Kuriyāvāda, 56, 226
 Kṛṣṇa 8, 9 66 164, 169
 Kṣamāsṛmanana See Devardhiganin
Kṣamāpānā, 246
Kshatrapa Mahārāja 196
Kshatriya 17 22, 132, aristocratic family 20 caste 103n, 132 clans, 104, dynasties 129, friend, 178, kings 23, Mārdhakshatrika 132 touch, 22
Kshatriyāna, 21, 23 45n
Kshatriyas, 22, 23 79 85n 88, 99 104,
 127, 128
Kshetra 54
Kṣhīnakarmā, 1
 Kubērā 258
 Kūdepārī 157
 Kulacandra, 152
Kulakas 243
Kulas 193 201 223
 Kumāra Bhāskaravarman, 214n
 Kumārabhatti 201
 Kumāragupta 205, 206
 Kumāragupta I 197, 207, 208, 215
 Kumāragupta II, 215
 Kumāra-kumārī parvata, 153, 153n, 179,
 180, 182
 Kumāramitra, 201
 Kumārapāla, 90

INDEX

- Kumārāpura, 189
Kumbha, 246
Kunāla, 188, 144, 145n
Kundagāma (Kundagrāma or Kunda-pura), 24, 26n, 84, 85, 87, 98, 102-104, 106
Kundakundācāra, 44, 46, 142, 240n
Kundiya, 224
Kūnika or Kūniva See Ajātasatru
Kunte, 18
Kunthu, 2n
Kuru, 110n
Kurus, 14
Kusa-grass, 20n, 50
Kusasthala, 80, 81, 81n
Kusāvati See Kusinārā or Kusinagara
Kushāna, chronicles, 108, inscriptions, 198-200, monarchs, 188, 197, period, 261
Kushānas, 194, 198, 204
Kusinārā or Kusinagara, 104, 107, 107n, 118
Kusumadhva See Pāṭaliputra
Kusumapura See Pāṭaliputra
Kutaku, 8
Kuvalayamāla, 209-212
- Lādha, 26, 110n
Lakshmi, 252
Lālāka, 156
Lālatendu Kesari, 153, cave, 153
Lahta Vistāra, 224
Lāñchanas, 2n, 152, 252
Lassen, 8, 11
Law, Bimala Charan, 102, 104, 106, 107
Law of Karma, 44
Laxmi-Vallabha, 90n
Leumann, 224-240
Licchavi, clan, 102n, 106, 118, confederacy, 107, country, 103n, king, 100, 233, kshatriyas, 101, princesses, 88, 89, 91, 99, Rājās, 102, sect, 88, war, 114
Licchavis (Licchavis), 85-88, 99, 101 108, 106-108, 114, confederacy of, 104, 114n
Life of Hsuen-Tsiang, 111n
Logavindusāra (Lohavindusāra), 219
Loka, 47
Lokapadaś, 243
Lomaśa Rsi Cave, 66
Lonka, sect, 75
Luders, H, 160n
- Maccha (Matsya), 110n
Mackenzie, 160n
Macphail, 141
Mādala Pāñji, chronicles, 154
Madhavācārya, 240
Madhuban inscription, 214
- Madhyadeśa, 173
Madhymukha, 162
Madra, 209
Magadha, 24, 26, 27, 29n, 88, 88, 96-99, 101, 102n, 106, 110-117, 119, 121, 122, 124, 126-128, 132, 134, 136, 146, 148, 149, 160n, 162, 169, 170, 172, 174, 177, 178, 183, 184, 192, 204, 222, 237
Māgadhi, 237
Mahābhārata, 9, 81, 181
Mahājanapadas, 85, 98, 107, 109, 110, 112
Mahākāśa, 242
Mahākosala, 110, 147n
Mahākshatrapa Śodāsa See Śodāsa
Mahāmātras See Dharma-Mahāmātra
Mahāmeghavāhana See Khāravela
Mahanandin, 125, 178n
Mahānsmitta, 60n
Mahānsmiṭha (Mahānsmiṭha), 221
Mahāpaccakkhāna (Mahapratyāhhyāna), 220
Mahāpadma Nanda See Nanda I
Mahāparinibbāna Sutta, 132
Mahārājābhisecanam, 165
Mahārājya-abhisheka, 159
Māharkhita (Māgharakshita), 195
Mahāśākhantaka, 114n
Mahāssati or Māhismati, 97n
Mahāvagga, 113
Mahāvamsa, 123, 131n, 132, 139, 140
Mahāvamsaṭṭhā, 65n
Mahāvijaya, 171
Mahāvīra, 2, 4, 6-13, 17-27, 29-32, 87-88, 41, 45n, 47, 51, 52, 56-58, 60, 64, 67, 69, 72, 74, 75, 77-79, 82n, 88, 92n-108, 110-112, 116-119n, 122, 124, 147, 148, 150, 153, 157, 158, 171, 177-180, 187, 192, 197, 201, 203, 209, 213, 222, 225, 227, 228, 230-232, 234-237, 239, 240, 246n, 252, contemporaries of, 238, Dharma, 10, doctrines of, 105, embryo of, 249, era of, 27, as a monk, 109, Nirodha of, 22n, 28, 30n, 31, 33, 34, 64, 69, 70, 73, 82, 99n, 124, 126, 128, 132, 139, 179, 187, 189n, 216n, 217, 238, predecessor of, 7, reform creed of, 7, system, 7; tirtha of, 10
Mahāvīrajanani, 102
Mahāvīra Mūhura, 211
Mahodaya, 81n
Maitraka clan, 215
Mayyima Nikāya, 115
Mālava, 110n, 191, 192, 214n; reckoning, 197
Malaya, 110n
Māldah, 83n
Māltini See Campā
Malla, 108, 110n
Mallaki, allies, 114, chiefs, 109, clans, 86
Mallakies or Mallakins, 86, 99, 107, 108

INDEX

- Mallas, 104, 107, 108, 118
 Mallinātha, 2n, 84n
 Mālā, 96, 187, 188
 Manaka, 236
Mana-Paryāya-Jñāna, 43n
 Mañcapuri, 156
Manda, 171
 Mandasor inscription, 197, 207
 Manju Chaudhuri, 158
 Mañkhali See Gośāla
 Mañkhaliputta See Gośāla
 Mañkhari Anantavarman, 66
 Mānsāra, 205n
 Manu, 17n, 165, law of, 49
Manusmṛti, 9
 Mānyakheta, 190
 Marshall, John, 199
 Maru, 8n
 Marunda, 243
Maskarin, 61n
 Mathura, 4, 21, 148, 161-168, 170, 177, 180n, 185, 187, 193, 195-197, 200-208, 222n, 247, 250-252, 256, carver, 259, find, 260, inscriptions, 187, 193, 194, 200, 201, 208-209, 207, 208, 228, remains, 251, school, 254, sculptures, 72, 228, 253, 255, 258
Maiti-Jñāna, 43n
 Maues, 188
 Maurya, dynasty, 30n, 147, Empire, 104, era, 32, 160, king, 80, 87, period, 212, rule, 80n
 Mauryas, 28, 104, 110, 124, 180-184, 186, 188, 148, 146, 149, 160n, 164, 165, 173-175, 192, 193
 Max Muller, 29
Mayūra-poshaka, 132
 Mazumdar, Akshoy Kumar, 11, 12, 83n
 Mazumdar, Ramesh Chandra, 160n
 Megasthenes, 137n, 148
 Meghakumāra, 118n
 Mehta, N C, 194
 Menander, 162, 163
 Merutunga, 27, 28, 30n, 34, 126
 Meyer, John Jacob, 89
 Mithilā, 26, 86, 87, 100
 Mithradates I, 163
 Mitra dynasty, 174
 Mitra, Rajendralala, 156, 160n
 Migara or Mrgadhara, 110
 Mīgāvali, 92
Mleccha, 51
 Mohammedan, conquest, 75, domination, 77, influence, 74, 75, persecution, 77, Triad, 42n
Mohaniya, 40n
Moksha, 5, 22, 89, 41-43, 46, 48n, 72, 230
 Moh, 110n
 Monahan, 141
 Mookerji, Ashutosh, 148, 186
 Mookerji, Radhakumud, 66
 Mora, 196n
 Moriyas, 182
 Mou-lo-san-pu lu, 212
 Moslems, 77n
 Mrgāvati, 89, 94, 95, 97, 98
Mudrā-Rākshasa, 180, 182n, 186
Mukta-Jivas, 89
Mukāmbara, 5
 Mūla, 94
Mūlasūtras, 221, 284, 286
 Munḍa, 124
Muni, 20n
 Munisuvrata, 2n
 Murā, 182
 Muranda, 194
 Mūshika, capital, 167
 Mushikas, 167
 Nābhi, 8n
 Nabhovāhana, 28
 Nāga-Dāsaka, 124
 Nāganikā, 163
 Nāgaravācaka See Umāsvāti
 Nāgārjuna, 157, 190n
 Nāgārjunī Hills, 65, 66, 144
Nagna, 5n
Nāgamesa or Nāgamesha, 21, 280, Nemeso, 260
Nakshatra, 175
 Nālandā, 26n, 85n, 111
Nāma-Karma, 40n, 45
 Nami, 87
 Nānāghāt, 167, inscriptions, 163, 164, 166n
Nānappavādyā (Jñānapravāda), 219
 Nanda, 88, 124, 125, 127-188, 186, 168, 169, 172, 177-179, 184, dynasty, 129, 147, 172, era, 32, 38, 161, 167, 168, 171, king, 82, line, 125, period, 212, rule, 34
 Nanda I, 125-128, 169, 178
 Nandarāja, 32, 127, 128
 Nandas, 28, 29n, 88, 110, 124-182, 184, 186, 138, 172, 178n, 252
 Nandivardhana or Nandavardhana, 24, 82, 83, 96, 116, 124, 125, 128, 169, 178
Nandī-gaccha, 181
 Nandisena, 118n
Nandīśūtra (Nandīśūtra), 221, 227n, 286
 Narasimhachar, 185, 186
 Naravarman, 79, 81, 197
 Nasik, 167, inscription, 164, 166n
Nāsti, 55
Nāta, 6
 Nāta or Nāya, clan, 104-106n, Kāshtriyas, 104n, 105
Nātaputta or Nāyaputta See Mahāvīra
 Nathuram Premi, 69
Nau Nand Dehra (Nander), 127

INDEX

- Navamuni cave, 151-153
Nava Tatvas, 39, 42n
Nayas, 53, 54, 242
Nāyādharmakathā (Jñānādharmakathā), 220, 228
Negameś See Nagamesa
Nemesa, 72, 259
Nemi or Ariahtanemi, 2n, 3, 6, 9n, 108, 209
Nemucandra, 243
Nigantha or Nirgrantha, 6, 83n, ascetics, 110, church, 139, or Digambara 51n, 217n, doctrine, 141, Samanas or Śramanas, 142, Nāḍaputta See Mahāvira
Niganthanātha See Mahāvira
Niganthas or Nirgranthas, 5-8, 11, 70, 108, 143, 149
Niganthus, 5
 Nihilistic Buddhist 54n
Niryuktis or Niryuktis, 56, 287-289
Nirgrī, 151
Nimi, 2n
 Nine Nandas, 33, 34, 125
Ninhagas or Ninhavas, 58, 285
Niryāṇ, 39, 41
Nirvāna, 5, 13, 20, 30n, 38, 42, 43, 46, 52, 79, 187
Nirudha-Kalikā, 71n, 243
Niryūvañ, 220, 232
Nishīdi or Nishīdi, 181-183
Nishā (Nishītha), 221
Nishāra 132n, 181
Nitya, 55
Nitya-Karma-Vidhā 244
Nitya-vāda, 55
Niyati, 36
Nyagrodhika, 240
Nyāya-Darśana 9n
Nyāyavādī, 242

Oghaniyutti, 237, 238
Ojha, Pandit 198n
 Oldenberg, 198n
Om, 20n
 O'Malley, 249
 Orissa, 128, 147n, 150, 153, 154, 157, 159, 167, 168, 172, 178, 179, 248, 250, 253, 260
Osval, 76n
Otusha, 157
Oudh, 83n
Ucavāya (Aupapātika) See Aupapātika
Oxford History of India, 33

Paccakkhānam, 235n
Paccakkhanappovāda (Pratyākhyāna pravāda) 219
Pādāhptācārya, 190, 190n, 194, 241, 243
Padārtha 54
Pādha (Pāndva), 110n

Paḍikamanam See Pratikramana
Paḍikamanum See Pratikramana
Padma Mihira, 140
Padmaprabha, 2n
Padma Purāṇa, 165
Padmāvati, 89, 93, 97, 98
Padroana, 107n
Paesi, 231
Pannas or Prakīrṇam, 220, 238
Paithān, 167
Pajjota or Pajjoya See Canda Pradyota
Pajjusana or Paryushana, 27n, 92, 92n, 93, 107, 188, 189, 189n
Pālaka, 28, 29n, 115
Pālī 6 canon, 104, 122, materials 33, 179, Sūtras, 58, texts 88n, tradition, 32n
Pālubhotra See Pātaliputra
Pālitānā, 74, 190
Panas, 183
Pāndum (Prāndayuh), 219
Pāṇcalpa 221
Pañcāla, 81-83, 110n, 162
Pañcāla, 14, 81
Pañcayāma Dharma 7, 10
Pāndya, country, 179, king 185
Pāndya, 180
Panhāvāgarānam (Prasnavyākaranāni), 220
Pāṇini's Grammar, 175
Pannattas, 24
Pannanā (Prajāpānā), 220, 232, 240
Pāpa, 39, 40, 42
Pāpā See Pāvā
Pārāṇhika Prāyascitta, 242
Parantapa, 95n
Pārasnāth Hill or Mt Pārśvanātha 5, 5n, 27, 79, 83, 246
Parasurāma 127
Parba See Parvata
Pargiter 82
Parishatparāṇi, 28, 30, 122, 131n
Parishishya 233
Pārsus, 76
Pārsi 110, 42n
Pārsonut See Pārasnāth Hill
Pārśvanātha, 2, 5, 7, 9, 13, 24, 37, 45n, 61, 64n, 70, 74, 79, 84, 88, 94n, 103, 106, 109, 111, 152-157, 200, 208, 209, 228, 239, 242, 248, 250, 252, 258, days of 261, Dharma of 10, 18, disciples of, 60n, Nirvāna of 82n
Pārśvanātha-Corrie 155
Pārthi, 163, 194
Parvata, 131, 131n, 133, 134
Parvata See Pavvayā
Parvataka See Parvata
Parvatī 66
Parvatiya Vamśāvalī, 131n
Parvatiā or Parvati See Pavvayā

INDEX

Paryushanā Kalpa, 234
Pāsāḍika Suttānta, 108
Pātāliputra, 87, 95, 128, 127, 131, 134, 135, 145n, 148, 162, 170, 172, 175, 177, 183, 194, 207, 224, 240
Pāṇāṅgutaṅkalpa, 145n
Patañjali, 162, 175
Pathak, K B 182
Pattana, 90, 90n
Paṭṭavāḥ, 189n, 191
Paushadhaday, 123
Pāvā or Pāvāpurī, 6, 26n, 27, 27n, 104, 107, 107n, 108, 118, 247
Pāvarika, 111n
Pavavayā, 210, 212
Pāyāsasutta, 224
Pedhāla, 84n
Perumal, temple, 67
Phuguyaśa, 255
Phraates I, 163
Pillar Edicts, 65, 141, 142
Pindanijutti (Pindaniryukti) 221, 237
Pingalavatsa, 65n
Pippalivana, 132
Putakas, 5, 8
Piyadasi See Asoka
Pliny, 150n
Po fa-to, 212
Pothvas, 197
Poussin, 11
Poygate, 67
Prabandhaśāntānāṁ, 27n
Prabhava, 37n 95
Prabhāvaka Carita, 194
Prabhāvatī, 89 84n 89, 91, 98, 155
Pradhan, 85, 96, 116, 122, 124
Pradyota See Anda Pradyota
Prakaranas, 241
Prākṛt, 6, 96
Prākritisms, 159
Primāna, 21
Prasamarti, 240
Praschnajit, 79, 81, 83, 83n, 110, 113, 114
Prashna-Prakhāsha, 243
Prasnavyākhaṇḍi, 230
Prasti, 127
Pratāpa Rudra Deva, 179
Pratikramana, 51, 52, 235n
Pratishthāna or Pratishthānapura, 168, 188, 190
Pratishthā Paddhati, 243
Pravaranaparikhā, 69n
Pravāda, 230
Prinsep, James, 156, 160n
Prishti Campā, 20n
Priyadarśanā, 24
Prityakārini See Trisalā
Prstha Campā, 94
Ptolemy, 150n
Pudgala, 88, 40

Pūḍāprakarama, 240
Punnabhadda, 94, 94n
Punya, 39, 40, Karmas, 42
Pupphacūḍo (Pushpacūḍā), 220
Pupphādo (Pushpikāh), 220
Purānas, 8, 9, 96, 116, 122, 124, 125, 127, 128, 132n, 144, 164, 166, 169, 170, 176, 178n, 204n
Purāṇic, lists, 9, material, 33, traditions, 124, 126
Purohita, 16n, 23
Purushamedha, 16n
Pūrvabhava, 238
Pūrvas (years), 3, 3n
Pūrvas or Purvas (sacred books), 9, 27, 52, 184n, 219, 221-223, 225, 230, 231, 238, 238
Pusamitra or Pushyamitra, 28, 184, 140, 159, 160n, 162, 168, 170, 172-177, 185
Pushpadanta or Suvidhi, 2n
Pushpapuri See Pātāliputra
Pushya, 175, 176

Quakers, 76

Radhakrishnan, 11
Rāga, 52
Rakhandji, 74
Rājagṛha, 26, 27, 56, 83n, 111, 112, 115, 117, 120, 148, 161, 170
Rājagurus, 212
Rāja-Murīya-Kāla, 32
Rājanīti, 219
Rājarsihi, 213
Rājasūya, 16n
Rājatarangini, 140, 190
Rājmati, 9
Rajput, 6
Rājubula or Rāñjubula, 196
Rājyavardhana, 214
Rākshasa, 136
Rāṅgumphā or Rāni Nur, 150, 154, 155, 155n, 250
Rāni-Naur, 183
Rānpur, 217
Rapson, 168, 193, 196, 198n
Rāshtrakūṭas, 190n
Rāshtrika, 167, 168
Rathamusala, 114n
Rathavīra, 69
Ratnācala, 111
Ratnagiri or Ratnakūṭa, 111
Ratnatraya, 42
Rājyaprasānya (Rājyaprasānya), 220, 224, 231
Raychaudhuri, 81, 85, 88, 91, 94, 110, 118, 122, 125, 127, 132, 133, 143
Rhys Davids, 85, 89, 97, 112, 121, 138
Rice, Lewis, 186
Richard III, 133n

INDEX

Rigveda, 14, 15n
Rijupālikā, 27
Rock Edicts, 141n, 165
Rockhill, 102
Rome, 104, 194
Roruka, 90n
Rothenstein, 258
Rshabha, 2n-4, 8, 9, 12, 85n, 178, 225, 288
Rshabhadatta, 21
Rahibhādika, 288
Rahis, 158

Sabarai, 150n
Saccapavāya (Satyapavāda), 219
Sāchumavapna, 160n
Saddalaputta, 59, 229
Saddarsana Samuccaya, 51
Sādhu-Cāritra, 43
Sādhus, 5, 43, 49, 52, 180, 212, 213
Sādhnuadhi, 188
Sahasānīka or Sahasrānīka, 96
Sahasramalla See Śivabhūti
Sahet-Mahet See Śrāvastī
Sāhi, 188n
Saisunāga, 83, 83n, 88, chronology, 82, dynasty, 125, 128, 147, 178, leadership of, 118, period, 212
Saisunāgas, 104, 110, 112, 116, 128, 125, 126, 130, 186, 188
Saka, 28, era, 4, 198, 207, 209, rulers, 194, Satraps, 186
Sakakāla, 207n
Sākala, 211
Sakas, 188, 198, 197, 204n
Sakatāla, 129
Sākatāyanācārya, 46n
Sāketa, 107, 162
Sākhās, 193, 201, 223
Sakra See Indra
Sākyaputta See Buddha
Sākyaputtiya Samanas, 142
Sāla-trec, 26
Sālvāhana, 168, 190
Sallekhana, 135
Sāmācārī, 234
Sāmādhi, 253
Sāmādhya (Syāmādhya), 206
Sāmāgama, 108
Sāmāgama Sutta, 6
Sāmāyam, 235n
Samana See Śramana
Sāmaññaphala-Sutta, 7
Sāmānyanīti, 219
Sāmānya Siddhas See Kevakins
Samatva, 52
Samavāya, 220, 227
Sāmāyika, 51, 52
Sambhava 2n, 26n, 109
Sambhuta (Brahmadatta), 82n
Sambhūtaviyaya, 129, 130n

Samet-Sikhar See Pāramāth Hill
Samgha, 42, 58, 60, 68, 76n, 185, 142, 148, 198, 201, 213, 216n, 239, 252
Samghas, 181, 182, 190
Samhūd, 288, 239
Śāmkara, 208
Sāmkhya, 11
Sammahitarka, 242
Samprati, 19, 80, 188, 148-149, 198
Samastra, 22, 41, 44, 92, 227
Samthāra (Samstāra), 220
Samudragupta, 148, 206
Samudravijaya, 112
Samvara, 89, 40
Samvatsarika, 247
Samyag-Darsana, 42, 43
Samyag-Jñāna, 42
Samyak-Cāritra, 42
Samyaktva-Saptati, 190
Sānchi, 258, 258, sculptures, 259
Sandavana, 106n
Sanjaya Belāttaputta or Belāthhiputta, 56, 59, 63n, 82
Sānikhas, 257
Śānti, Ācārya, 68
Śāntinātha, 2n, 209
Saptabhanig, 55, Naya, 55, 56
Sarasvatī, 252
Sāriputta, 108
Sārānāth, 253
Sarpegumpha or Serpent Cave, 156
Sarvajña, 1
Sarvamedha, 16n
Sāsana-devīs, 152
Sasānīka See Sahasānīka
Sāstrakāras, 39
Sāstras, 87
Sat, 53
Sātakarni, 148, 168, 164, 167, 168, 177, 185, dynasty, 166
Sātānīka, 92-97, 113
Sātānīka II See Sātānīka
Sātavāhana dynasty See Sātakarni dynasty
Sātavāhana, kings, 166, princes, 167
Sātavāhanas, 164, 167, 173, 189n, 190
Sātayāna, 188, 189n
Satghara or Satbakhra, cave, 151, 152
Satraps inscriptions, 197
Satruñjaya, 189, 190, 190n, 245, 246, Jina, 173
Satruñjaya Māhātmya, 74, 90
Satya, 43
Saurāshtra, 215
Sauvira, 89-92n, 98, 99
Sāvthī or Sāvthipura See Śrāvastī
Sayambhava, 95, 285
Sayānī See Sātānīka
Savyambhava or Sajjambhava See Sayambhava

INDEX

Scharnhorst, 165
 Schiefner, 178
 Sebastian, 246
 Seleukos, 184
 Senajit, 82, 83n
 Senart, 141
 Sermanes, 187n
 Seven-Nayas, 57
 Shaonano Shao, 188
 Shastipāla, 107
 Shigrām, 258
 Shookul-Tīrtha, 138
 Siddhānta, 218, 219, 221-226, 228, 231, 233, 236
 Siddhārtha, 6, 21, 23, 24n, 84, 85, 87, 88, 104, 105
 Siddhis, 159, 164, 184, 233
 Siddhasena Divākara, 22, 22n, 71n, 187, 189, 239, 241, 242, 261
 Signorelli, 248
 Siha, 202
 Sīlānka, 10, 67
 Sīmha Samgha, 181
 Simuka, 166
 Sindhu, 90
 Sindhudā, 183
 Sindhu Sauwira Deśa See Sauvira
 Sīngalese canon, 6
 Sitala, 2n
 Sītāmbara, 181
 Śiva, 66, 242, 244
 Śivā, 89, 91, 96, 98
 Śivabhūti or Sahasramalla, 69, 78
 Śivamitrā, 197
 Śivanandā, 106
 Śivasahasra, 9
 Śivayaśā, 255, 256
 Si yu-ki I, 51n
 Skandagupta, 208, 215n
 Skandilācūrya, 222n
 Smith, Vincent, 9, 81-83, 76n, 114, 125, 126, 128, 129, 132, 134, 136, 137, 143, 144, 160n, 162, 165, 168, 170, 175, 178, 192, 204, 207, 211, 212n, 216, 240, 252, 258, 255, 256, 258
 Smṛti, 15
 Sobhānāth, 109
 Soddāsa, 196, 197, 277, inscriptions, 198
 Solasa Mahājanapada, 81
 Soma, 25
 Sonagiri, 111
 Southern Kārnātaka, 8
 Sovira See Sauvira
 Śramanahood, 87
 Śramanas, 20n, 24, 27, 82, 110, 117, 141, 142, 145n, 150, 151, 136, 182, 185
 Śrāvakas, 2, 51n, 201n, 229
 Śravana Belgōja, 185, 187, 188, 181
 Śrāvastī, 26, 26n, 27n, 58n, 60, 102, 110
 Śrāvastī, 201n

Śrenika See Bimbisāra
 Śreyāmsa, 2n
 Śrī, 249
 Śrīgṛha, 202
 Śrīmāla, 76n
 Śrīyaka, 129, 130
 Śrūta-Jñāna, 43n
 Śrutakevalin, 135
 Śrutaskandhas, 225
 Śruti, 15
 Sterling, A., 160n
 Stevenson, Rev. J., 11, 107
 Stevenson, Mrs. Sinclair, 51, 75, 83n, 189, 236
 Sthānakavādin, 74, 75
 Sthānānga, 57, 220, 227
 Sthavira-Kalpa, 70n
 Sthaviras, list of the, 111, 135, 155
 Sthavirāśvaka-Carita, 115, 123, 125
 Sthūlabhadra, 80, 66, 69, 71, 129, 135, 188, 221
 Sthunka, 131n
 Strato I, 196
 Strato II, 196
 Stūpa, 180, 180n, 182, 255, worship, 251
 Stūpas, 65, 182, 247n-249, 252, 257n, 258
 Stūhs, 71n
 Suari, 150n
 Subandhu, 159
 Subhabhūmi, 26n
 Subhacandra, 152
 Subodhikā commentary, 95
 Sudarśanā, 24
 Sudharma, 11, 25, 52, 94, 95, 100, 180n, 225
 Śūdra-garbhā-udbhava, 125
 Śūdras, 14, 17, 17n, 19, 51, 125
 Su-gāṅgeya, 172
 Suhastin, 80, 69, 143, 145, 146, Mahā-giri tradition, 145
 Sujyeshthia, 69, 98
 Sulasa, 47, 48
 Sumati, 2n, 8
 Sumatigani, 76n
 Summeta, Mt. See Pārasnāth Hill
 Sunga dynasty, 174
 Sungas, 134, 146, 164, 166, 175, 180, 185, 198, 256
 Sunṛta, 7
 Suparnas, 258, 259
 Supārsva, 2n, 258
 Sūrasena, 110n
 Sūri, 123
 Suriabha, 231
 Sūryapamath (Sūryaprajñapti), 100, 220, 232, 238
 Sūrya Varṇa, 179
 Suśhita, 135
 Susu-Nāga (Sisunāga), 127

INDEX

Sūtrakṛtāṅga (Sūyagadāṅga), 62, 67, 83, 85, 87n, 99, 101, 105, 220, 225-227, 235, 238, Niryukti, 56
Sūtras, 4, 9, 13, 24, 62, 85n, 237, 241
Śvarṇa Siddhi, 190n
Śvabhāva, 86
Śvapna-Vāsavadatta, 122, 160n
Śvayamvara, 181
Śveta, 231
Śvetāmbara, 68, 146, belief, 222, canonical literature, 71 Chaturvidha Samgha, 200, contact, 189, 190, Digambara schism, 145, division, 78, Jainas, 190, 236, Pattāvah, 240n, rule, 146, school, 181 sects, 67, 75, 91, texts 223, traditions, 69-71, 72
Śvetāmbaras, 46n, 69-72, 74, 75, 108, 135, 145, 153n, 221, 223-225, 239n, 242
Swargapura or Swargapuri cave, 147, 155
Śvastikas, 150, 151, 158, 249
Syādvāda, 9, 58, 54, 56, 57, 68n, drśhi 2
Syādvādān, 54n
Syāmārya, 232, 240
Syāt, 54n, 55, -asti, 55, -asti-avaktavyah 55, -asti-nāsti, 55, -asti-nasti-avaktavyah, 55, -avaktavyah, 55, nāsti, 55
Tacchāsūkara Jātaka, 118
Taittirīya-Aranyaka, 9
Tālapūta, 120
Tanasulva or Tosali, 168
Taṭṭa (Taṭṭa, (Tandulāntālaka), 220
Tan, Tan, 244
Tapa Gaccha 76n, 78, 189n
Tapa Gaccha Pāttāvalis, 232, 240
Tapas, 52
Tāpasa, 20n
Tāranītha 173
Tarangavālī also Tarangalolā 241
Tattvārthadhigama Sūtra, 240, 241
Tattvas, 12, 43
Tawney 122, 191, 192
Taxilā or Takshailā 132, 199
Tepaktyā, 60n
Telang, 6
Terasiya, 63n
Thalmandar, 246
Thāna (Sthāna) See Sthānāṅga
Thakṣar, 214
Thomas, Edward, 11, 137-140
Thomas, F. W., 31
Thusa Jātaka, 118
Tiele, 23
Tiger cave, 155, 156
Tirabhukti, 88n
Tirthakas, 110
Tirthankaras, 1-5, 7-9, 12, 13, 21, 23, 45, 46, 82, 72, 73, 94, 111, 119n, 151-155, 157, 172, 200, 209, 218, 238, 248, 252, 253, 258

Tirthas, 5, 10, 189, 190, 247
Tirihyas, 173
Tisagutta, 58
Tishya See Pushya
Tod, 78
Toramāna or Torarāya 210-215
Torana, 255, 256, 258-260
Trakālavat, 1
Trikandāśeṣha, 88n
Tripaḍī, 38, 53
Tripṇaka, 224
Tri-Ratna, 42
Trisalā, 21, 23, 24, 85n, 88, 99, 104, 105, 117
Trishashti-Śālākā, 122
Tristubh, 223
Trisūla cave, 152
Trisūlas, 150, 151, 249, 255, 257
Uccenāgarī branch, 202
Udāharana, 235
Udaka, 8n
Udaya See Udayin
Udayagiri 66n, 111, 153n, 154, 249, hills, 73, 150, 151, 159, 178, cave inscription 208
Udāyana or Udayane, 89-91, 96-98, 113
Udāyasya See Udayin
Udaya See Udayin
Udayibhudda See Udayin
Udayibhudda See Udayin
Udayin 34, 95, 115, 116, 120, 122-125
Uddyotakasamvāsa, 152, 153
Udena See Udayana
Udyama 36
Udyotanasūtri, 209, 210, 213, 215
Ugras, 85, 99, 108
Ugrasena 9
Ujjain 68, 96, 97, 115, 135, 145, 187, 188, 242
Ujjaini See Ujjain
Ujjayini See Ujjain
Ujjini See Ujjain
Umāśvīti or Umāśvīti or Umāśvīti, 45, 240, 241
Upasamāla 239
Upāṅgas, 119n, 150, 220, 231, 233
Upamishads, 18, 54
Upasargakevalagala Kathi, 182
Upāsraya, 222n
Upayoga 46
Uppāya (Utpāda) 219
Ushkar (Hushkapuri), 199
Uttarādāsaka (Uttarādāsaka) 195
Utpāda 53
Utsarpini, 3n
Uttarā, 69
Uttarajhayana (Uttarādhyayana), 6, 10, 11, 25, 50, 82, 87, 89, 90n, 92, 101, 112, 116, 117, 221, 234, 235, 238

INDEX

- Uttarāpatha, 172, 210
Uṛṣaga Dasāo (Upāsahadasāh) 94, 100,
 103n-106, 119n 220, 229
Uṛṣaggharastotra, 239
- Uśaka*, 223
Uśaka-Sramana See Umāsvātī
Uchī (Vātsī), 195
Vadukha, 157
Vaidhī 117, 118
Vaidhīputra 95n, 117
Vaikunthagumpha See Swargapuri
Vaikunthapura See Swargapuri
Vaimānaka 252
Vaindyakavāda, 56 226
Vairāja 12
Vaisālī 23, 24, 26 64 84n, 86-88, 92, 99-
 104, 113 115 122
Vaisālīka See Mahāvīra
Vaiṣṇavism 205
Vaitāliya, 223
Vajrā 114
Vajrabhūmi 26n
Vajji, 85 100 110n
Vijjan or Vijjan confederation, 88, 102,
 104 107, war, 114
Vijjans or Vrjjs (Vajjis), 85, 104 116,
 107 113, 114
Vajra, 169
Vijrasvini 185
Vāṣṭha 207n
Vallabhī or Vallabhīpura, 30, 68, 73, 90n,
 211 215, 216 222
Vallabhus, 215
Vāmā, 18
Vāmadāyama, 235n
Vamsa or Vatsi (Vaccha), 96-99 110n, 118
Vāṇīdasāo (Vāṇīdasāh), 220
Vantjagrāma or Vānīvagāma, 26n, 84n,
 100 102 103
Vankāta 8
Varāhamuhura, 5, 67, 73, 90
Vārūnāvī, 109
Vardhamāna See Mahāvīra
Vāsavadattā or Vāsuladatta, 97
Vasishtha, 15
Vasudāman, 96
Vāśudatta, 197-199, 204
Vasumatī, 94
Vāśupūjya, 2n 26n, 94, 94n
Vāvalāra (Vyavahāra), 221, 243, 238
Vāyu Purāna, 123
Vedanīya, 40n
Vedānta, 11, 19n
Vedāntism, 56
Vedas, 16, 18
Vedehi, 88
Vedehiputto, 88n, 118
- Vedic*, polity, 18, culture, 103, ruling family 147n
Vehalla 64 118
Vena, 161 165
Vetrāval inscription, 207n
Vesālī 88n 99, 100 102 103, 105-107
Vesali or Vesali, 26n, 87n, 101, 102n, 103
Vicaracm 27n, 28
Videha, 24, 26, 27n, 86-88, 95, 99, 100, 104, 109, 115, 118
Videhadattā, 21n, 86 88
Vidchans or Vidhas, 14, 85-88, 101, 107
Videli 88n
Vidyabhusana Satis Chandra, 56, 242
Vidyādhara 152
Vidyādhari-Sākhā, 206
Vihāras, 145n
Vijñānuppannāya (Vijñānupavāda), 219
Vijñāpī patra, 246
Vikramā or Vikramāditya, 28, 69 71n, 187, 188, 190 192, 241-243, accession of, 30, conversion of 189, 261 death of, 68, 69, era of, 27 29, 31, 188, 196-
 199, 214, father of, 232n
Vikramacarita, 187, 243
Vimala, 2n
Vimaya, 233
Vinavavijayaganin 95
Vincent Smith See Smith
Vira See Mahāvīra
Vīratthava (Vīratava), 220
Vitrāval Pattana See Pattana
Virnechipuram, 67
Viryappavāya (Viryapavāda), 219
Visākha, 142
Vishnu, 66n, 205
Vishnugupta See Cāṇakya
Vishnu-Purāna, 8, 122n
Vitabhaya or Viyabhaya 89-91
Vivāgasūyam (Vipākāśrutam or Vipāka-
Sūtra) 220, 230
Vivasana, 5
Vyākhyāpannattu (Vyākhyāpajñāpiti) See
Bhagavati
Vodva Stūpa, 199, 251, 257, 258
Von Gutschmid, 163
Vrhadratha, 174
Vrksakas See Devatās
Vyantaras, 252
Vyavahāra Samatā, 176
Vyaya, 53
- Warren, 36
 Weber, 219, 227n, 230-233, 235, 236
 Wilberforce-Bell 215, 216
 Wilson, 8, 11, 74, 107n, 141
 Winternitz, 219, 223, 227, 230, 233, 235,
 240
- Xandrammes See Agrammes

INDEX

- |  |   |
|--|---|
|  Yajña, 16 Yajurveda-Samhitā, 9 Yaksha, 187 Yakṣis, 256n Yāpa professors or Yāpaniṣas, 180, 181, 184 Yāpana or Yāpaniṣa Saṃgha, 181 Yasodā, 24          |  Yati, 5n, 51n, 202, 208, 234 Yavan king, 155 Yavanas, 162, 204n, 250 Yogapaṭṭika, 244 Yogśāstra, 47, 49 Yogendrācārya, 46 Yonas, 141 Yuch-chi, 194          |
|--|---|

